WILD GALES AT 22 BELOW

Two Days of Exposure Cripple Native Porters Sent to Establish Highest Outpost.

ALMOST A WEEK IS LOST

But, Looking Forward to Blessing of the Local Lama, Party Is Hopeful of Success.

By Lieut. Col. E. F. NORTON,

New York Times-London Times. Copyright by Arrangement with the Mount Everest Committee.

BASE CAMP, Rongbuk Glacier, May 18.—When I last wrote hence, on April 29, things had gone so smoothly that we were wondering when the crash was coming. We had reached the base camp exactly according to plan and, amply provided as we were with local labor, the way seemed clear before us to a possible assault on the mountain somewhere about May 17. Portraits of the gods guarding Everest are painted on the walls of Rongbuk Monastery. We studied them with interest and smiled.

The first task after No. 2 camp had been established and stocked by local labor with all the stores for the higher camps was to transport the necessary proportion to No. 3 camp with our own specially enlisted porters.

On May 3 Mr. Mallory, Captain Noel, Mr. Odell, Mr. Hazard and Mr. Irvine started for Camp No. 3, accompanied by twenty of these porters. On the following day Havildar Umar of the Sixth Gurkha followed with twenty more porters. These two parties were to complete the establishment of Camp No. 3, close under the glittering wall of the North Col, with all the stores required for itself and the higher camps, and then to proceed with stocking Camp No. 4 on the North Col itself, as soon as a snow and ice staircase to that point had been reconnoitred and constructed by Odell and Hazard. A reserve of twelve porters, including some of the toughest veterans of two years ago, was maintained for the moment at the base under Captain Geoffrey Bruce, Dr. Sommervell and Mr. Beetham.

I left the base camp on May 6. It was a very clear, cold morning, after a night when the temperature at the base camp fell to minus 10 Fahrenheit. I arrived without incident at No. 2 camp on the morrow, finding Noel there.

The same evening it began to be clear that all was far from well. The party of porters based on No. 2 camp had made two trips toward No. 3, but encountered such low temperatures, combined with head winds, that Mallory decided to establish a dump for stores at a point on the glacier about a mile short of the camp.

Crippled Porters Stagger Back.

But who are these weary, crippled men coming staggering and straggling through the seracs of the glaciers into No. 2 between 4 and 6 P. M. from the direction of No. 3, looking for all the world like stragglers of the British Army I once saw blocking the roads south of Le Cateau on Aug. 27, 1914?

It appears they are porters of the first party from No. 3 camp. They have made one "carry" to that camp, two days ago, and are now clean driven out by exposure and exhaustion, after spending forty-eight hours practically confined to their tents, with only the bare necessities in the shape of food and clothing—in other words, a blanket apiece and the local barley meal to eat. Ample and varied supplies of food and spare blankets and most of the fuel are still dumped on the glacier, a mile short of their camp.

As at St. Quentin, Chaulny and Noyon in 1914, there is now no time to count the cost nor look far ahead. The stores dumped at No. 2 for all the higher camps must be ruthlessly broken up and expended. High altitude tents are pitched; priceless stores of solidified spirit are broached; high altitude sleeping bags are issued; the capacity of No. 2 camp is doubled for the night, and some degree of comfort is extended to the sufferers.

Terrors of 22 Below Zero.

On the morrow Mallory arrived at breakfast from No. 3 camp, and we held a council of war. Mallory's story was short and sweet. Temperatures as much as minus 22 Fahrenheit, ten degrees lower than anything met in 1922, coupled with a terrible wind and the failure of the majority of the stores from No. 2 to reach No. 3 Camp, explain the rout of the first party. Mallory himself ordered the retreat and had practically to manhandle many of the men out of the tents onto their feet, so completely had the hardships taken the heart out of them.

Such weather conditions surely must be exceptional, and it was decided to rest and recuperate the first party at No. 2 camp and next day to send the second party from No. 2 camp without loads to the glacier dump, thence to carry all essentials up to No. 3 camp, where they were to remain, changing places with the first party.

The situation was explained to the men, and the second party went on their third trip in four days in good heart under Somervell's escort.

Women Call for Prayers For 'Dry' Party Platforms

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Prayers will be delivered all over the country to keep "wet" or "damp" planks out of the platforms of the two major political parties, under plans announced today by the Women's National Committee for Law Enforcement, representing eleven women's organizations.

Messages have been sent to Protestant ministers requesting that on next Sunday a brief period be devoted to silent prayer, and that this be supplemented by other exercises relevant to the subject.

In many churches action will be taken on resolutions asking both parties to insert in their platforms strong planks for law observance and enforcement.

TWO STUDENTS HELD IN FRANKS SLAYING

KNEW KIDNAPPED YOUTH

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 30.—Following his arrest early this morning, after ownership of the spectacles found near the body of the kidnapped and slain Robert Franks had been traced to him, Nathan E. Leopold Jr., 19 years old, son of Nathan Leopold, a millionaire box manufacturer, denied any knowledge of the crime.

He admitted ownership of the spectacles and said he took an unusual interest in literature pertaining to perversion. His chum, Richard Loeb, 18 years old, the son of a millionaire, Albert H. Loeb, Vice President of Sears, Roebuck & Co. corroborated part of his story.

Leopold admitted that he knew Robert Franks, but said the acquaintance was slight on account of the difference in their ages, Leopold being 19 and Franks 13.

The police were reported late tonight to have found two bottles of poison in Leopold's room, but they gave no explanation of what he had said, if anything, regarding it.

Sidney Stein, frequently a companion of Leopold, was the last witness to be called in the investigation into the habits of Leopold and his whereabouts on the evening of May 21, the date on which Frank was kidnapped.

Leopold wrote for Milton D. Smith, assistant State's attorney, many samples of his lettering of the address "Mr. Jacob Franks, 3,052 Ellis Avenue, Special Delivery," the object being to compare Leopold's work with that on the letter demanding $10,000 ransom.

Several specimens of Leopold's typing were examined by H. P. Sutton, a typewriter expert, who stated that the youth's typewriter was not the one used by the ransom letter writer.

Leopold, who described himself as the "youngest graduate of the University of Chicago, explained frequent visits to the swamp where the boy's body was found by his interest in ornithology. He had been there often with "birding" classes, he said, and swelled his allowance of $125 monthly by teaching three classes in ornithology when he was not studying law at the university.

The evening of the kidnapping he spent with Loeb, he insisted, first in Lincoln Park and later in riding about with two girls, finally ending the night at a cabaret. Loeb insisted he was not with Leopold that night.

Leopold presented a manly, straightforward appearance and an intelligent, quick-thinking mind. "I want you to get this correctly," he said to a reporter. "Judge Crowe asked me whether I had ever read any works dealing either directly or indirectly with any form of perversion. I replied that I had, and among them mentioned 'I Ragionamenti' of Pietro Aretino. I also mentioned several others."

Then he told of his plan to translate that work from Italian to English and "get out a limited edition of some 200 or 300 copies, fully annotated and con-

ALLIES GIVE BERLIN 30 DAYS TO ACCEPT CONTROL OF ARMS

Note Sent to Germany Virtually an Ultimatum in Which Four Powers Join.

REFUSE TO LET LEAGUE ACT

Germany's Plea That Demands of Treaty Have Now Been Fulfilled Is Rejected.

FULL INSPECTION DEMANDED

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 30.—The note of the Conference of Ambassadors to Berlin on disarmament, made public here today, shows the Allies have addressed a virtual ultimatum to Germany to consent to the resumption of allied military control. This action by the Allies means that in addition to facing its many domestic difficulties the new French Government will come into power having a crisis with the Reich on its hands.

It is not to be supposed the note to Germany signed by Premier Poincaré represents a move by the retiring Premier to put himself on record, for before being sent the disarmament note was approved by Prime Minister MacDonald and represents the well-thought-out attitude of the British Government. It certainly, however, places a heavy burden on the shoulders of the French Premier to be named next week.

It will be recalled that allied military control in Germany ceased in January, 1923, when the Ruhr was occupied. Two months previous to that an allied note had laid down five categories with respect to which Germany was accused of being in default. Last Fall, when the Germans gave up passive resistance in the fight for the Ruhr, the Allies reminded them of their desire to resume military inspection. There followed an exchange of notes which led to the sending by the Allies of a letter on March 5 demanding that Germany agree to a general allied inquiry into her military status, following which the Allies would agree to consider lessening the control.

Germans Asked League Control.

On March 31 the Germans replied, taking the stand that disarmament provisions of the Treaty of Versailles had all been fulfilled, that no longer was there any need of allied supervision and suggesting military control of the Reich be turned over to the League of Nations as provided in Article 213 of the Treaty of Versailles.

Since then the matter has rested in abeyance, due to the allied desire not to give the German Nationalists ammunition during the German election campaign.

The new note says the present situation cannot be prolonged and the Allies demand formally the resumption of inspection and especially of the general inquiry asked in March.

The Ambassadors' note says that in asking allied inspection to end and League inspection to begin at this time Germany forgets the treaty gives the Allies the right to exercise their control until the disarmament clauses of the treaty are fulfilled, and adds:

"It can scarcely be sustained that this condition today is fulfilled."

The note says that it is for the Allies and not Germany to decide when Germany has fulfilled the condition of the treaty and denies flatly the German contention that these conditions have been fulfilled by the Reich. The five classes mentioned in 1922 no longer contain all the points on which the Allies are suspicious and recent indications from Germany only tend to increase their conviction that Germany seeks to conceal the real facts of her military status.

Woman Is Named to Senate Of University in Dresden

DRESDEN, May 30.—Frau Hilde Wawrzinick, wife of Otto Wawrzinick, Professor of the Science of Automobiling at the Dresden University of Technology, has been appointed an honorary Senator of the university in recognition of her services for student welfare.

Frau Wawrzinick, who is a daughter of Stefan Hansel, a noted Vienna industrialist, is said to be the first woman ever appointed to any German university Senate or Faculty governing board.

JOEL WOLFE THORNE, HIT BY AUTO, IS DEAD

Banker, Driving a Motor Truck to His Farm, Struck While Fixing His Lights.

HIS DIVORCE JUST UPHELD

On Thursday Appellate Division Confirmed Decree Against Former Mary Casey.

Joel Wolfe Thorne, the banker, died early yesterday in the Danbury, Conn. Hospital from injuries received Thursday night when struck by an automobile near Patterson, N. Y., four miles from Danbury. Less than a day before the Appellate Division in New York had confirmed the decree of divorce he had obtained from his wife, once Mary Casey, "Belle of Third Avenue," and voted the prettiest girl in Barnard College, class of 1903.

Mr. Thorne was 51 years old and the son of the late Samuel Thorne and the late Phere Van Schoonhoven Thorne of 914 Fifth Avenue. Two brothers survive, Samuel Thorne Jr. and Edwin Thorne. Another brother, William V. Thorne, died a year ago. Joel W. Thorne was a cousin of Oakleigh Thorne, the banker. Mr. Thorne inherited a large share of his father's fortune, which now goes to his ten-year-old son, Joel Wolfe Thorne Jr.

With the Appellate Division decision filed Thursday, and his divorce fight finally out of the way, the banker immediately decided to take up Summer residence at his large farm at Millbrook, N. Y., near Danbury. A farmhand brought a motor truck to the city. On this were piled numerous articles from the Fifth Avenue house, keepsakes bequeathed Mr. Thorne by his mother on her death six months ago.

Banker Was Driving Truck.

Mr. Thorne was driving the truck along the Connecticut road on Thursday evening, with the farmhand at his side, when a passing motorist shouted at them. "Your rear lights are out!" The banker got out to investigate. He was stooping over to examine them when he heard a car approaching from behind. He leaped to get out of the way, but in his confusion jumped into the path of the approaching automobile.

The car, owned and driven by Leo Philo Mirsky, a manufacturer, of 49 West Eighty-third Street, and containing four other men, hurled Mr. Thorne to the side of the road. He was picked up unconscious and put in Mirsky's car, which took him to Danbury Hospital. There it was found that several ribs and his right leg had been broken, the left leg dislocated and that he had suffered internal injuries. He was operated upon, but died at 4 A. M. yesterday. The body was taken to the farm at Millbrook.

The Coroner at Danbury will hold an inquest today. Mirsky has not been put under charges, but has been detained as a material witness for the inquest. Mirsky and his companions said the tragedy was due to Mr. Thorne's confused act in leaping directly into the path of the oncoming automobile. They said their car was traveling at an ordinary rate of speed and had slowed down as it came near the truck.

Wife Won Fame at Barnard.

The domestic difficulties of Mr. and Mrs. Joel W. Thorne occupied the attention of the courts for a number of years and involved sensational charges on both sides. Mrs. Thorne was Mary Casey, born on Third Avenue of a humble family. When graduated from Barnard in 1903 she was voted not only the prettiest girl in the class but the member who had done most for Barnard.

Miss Casey was a public school teacher in 1911 when, after a romance of a year, she was married to Thorne in the Hotel Plaza by Supreme Court Justice Goff. It was Mr. Thorne's second marriage, his first having resulted in a divorce. A son was born to the couple in 1914.

In the litigation that developed in 1918 Mrs. Thorne charged her husband's relatives with trying to separate them because of her humble birth. They parted on their son's third birthday. Mrs. Thorne was placed in the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital in 1918. In habeas corpus proceedings Mrs. Thorne charged that she had been induced by a physician to go to Bellevue for "a rest cure." She accused her husband of instigating the move. Justice Giegerich ordered her release, saying she should not have been detained.

Son Disappeared From Farm.

In August, 1919, their boy disappeared from the farm at Millbrook while with his mother. Later he was found in his father's custody. Mrs. Thorne charged that her husband had him kidnapped. The boy was sent West for a time.

After separating from her husband and filing suit for separation, in which she alleged cruelty and non-support, Mrs. Thorne lived for a few years at the Hotel des Artistes, at 1 West Sixty-seventh Street. The banker answered the separation action by filing suit for divorce, in which he accused her of being friendly with a number of men and specified Raymond B. Wilson, a former sailor. Mr. Thorne accused his wife of drinking to excess, assaulting him and their child, of threatening to kill the banker and of shouting at a church service her husband was attending. "I am going to raise the devil." Mrs. Thorne declared that Wilson was a private detective engaged by her attorney to protect her during her troubles with her husband.

David R. Daly, referee in the case, recommended that Mr. Thorne be awarded an absolute divorce, with custody of his son. Justice Burr confirmed the referee's report. The Appellate Division upheld this decision and denied Mrs. Thorne's appeal on Thursday. The banker's relatives left for Millbrook yesterday. Mrs. Thorne was out of town.

The funeral arrangements have not been announced. Mr. Thorne was a member of the Metropolitan and Downtown clubs, the Society of Colonial Wars and the Sons of the Revolution.

BISHOP BROWN TELLS HERESY COURT HOW HIS VIEWS CHANGED

Read Darwin and Haeckel and Found Himself in a New World.

STUDIED KARL MARX ALSO

Read Socialist Literature and Decided Present-Day Thought Should Be Reconstructed.

GOT NO AID FROM BISHOPS

Still Believes Firmly in the Scriptures, but Interprets Them Symbolically.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 30.—William Montgomery Brown, retired Protestant Episcopal Bisnop of Gallon, Ohio, on trial for heresy before a court of Bishops, testified in his own behalf today and narrated the story of his religious life as a progress from orthodox Episcopallanism to Darwinism and Marxianism. He declared emphatically that he believed the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds "ten times more than I did in my orthodox days."

In writing his book, "Communism and Christianism," twenty-three extracts from which furnish the basis of the charges against him, Bishop Brown said his purpose was to bring religion to a basis where it might be accepted by all. He rejected the supernatural interpretation of the Scriptures, and said he interpreted them symbolically. He will be cross-examined tomorrow.

The church hall of Trinity Cathedral was crowded when Bishop Brown was called. He was permitted to tell his story in his own way, but at his own suggestion that he was "getting to be garrulous, like a preacher," he was diverted several times into the regular channel of the inquiry.

"Cut me off any time you want to," the defendant told Presiding Bishop John G. Murray. His humorous sidelights of his own life were vastly entertaining to the audience and to some of the Bishops on the trial court.

Says He Sought Help from Churchmen.

Bishop Brown sought to show that when he felt himself "slipping" from orthodoxy he sought assistance from many influential officials of his Church, but they gave him scant consideration. The "most learned man in the Church," he said, whose advice he asked, reproved him for not knowing the Einstein theory "that we go somewhere without going anywhere."

In obtaining from the defendant the statement that he is, in hearty accord with the Bible, "from Genesis to Revelation," his counsel is trying to force the prosecution to prove that a man who believes the Bible can still be a heretic and that any one who, while believing the Bible, interprets it differently from those who have placed Bishop Brown on trial is a heretic.

The introduction of Bishop Brown was the climax of a day that began with the announcement of Joseph W. Sharts, counsel for the defense, that he would introduce a mass of testimony showing the modernistic and scientific viewpoints of religion. He promised to prove that belief was a mental process, and that the problem before the trial court of Bishops was not theological but psychological.

Although he was not permitted to question his witnesses along the lines he indicated, Mr. Sharts read into the record what he expected them to say, and in this way he got before the Court a long narrative of the origin of Christianity, of Christian belief and ritual, and of the parallels between the earliest Persian, Hindu and Egyptian writings and the more recent Christian writings.

When his name was called, Bishop Brown walked slowly to the platform, passed a hand over the long white hair that hung over his collar, and, smiling on the eight Bishops who are trying him, he invited Mr. Sharts to interrogate him. It was suggested that he give the story of his connection with the Church. Church Advocate Charles L. Dibble objected that this was "too broad," but he was overruled.

Tells of His Lifework.

"I will be 69 years old Sept. 4," said the Bishop. "I entered the ministry in 1883 and I was ordained in this cathedral. Subsequently I became Archdeacon of Ohio, remained at this post eight years, and was then consecrated to the coadjutorship of the diocese of Arkansas, where I eventually became Bishop in charge of the diocese for nearly fourteen years. I retired in 1912 because Arkansas was a hard diocese and I was in poor health. I had been in the saddle for thirty years. I had

COOLIDGE DEMANDS HARDING COURT PLAN, NO 'DOUBTFUL OR AMBIGUOUS POSITION'; FAVORS FURTHER CUT IN ARMAMENTS

Pepper Says Coolidge Had to Back Earlier Stand; He Still Expects President to Accept His Plan

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Commenting tonight on President Coolidge's declaration on the World Court issue, Senator Pepper said:

"The President has simply reaffirmed what he said when he commended the Harding proposal to the Senate last December.

"It is as if he had said to the Senate: 'I have made my move; it is your turn next.' I have no doubt that the President would approve the action of the Senate if we were to adopt the modification of the Harding proposal, which was reported out by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

"In the meanwhile, I do not see how he could be expected to vary the proposal which he originally commended. It is in order to get the benefit of collective judgment that the foreign policy of the United States must under the Constitution result from a meeting of minds between the President and the Senate.

"If, after the Senate has acted, the President does not approve, then there is something like a deadlock. That happened when Mr. Wilson was President, but I do not apprehend anything of that sort in this case.

"It is the Senate's move and my hope is that the move will be made promptly and along the lines of the committee report."

Ex-Secretary Root to Be Coolidge's Guest Today.

WASHINGTON, May 30 (Associated Press).—The announcement was made at the White House tonight that Elihu Root, who was a member of the committee created under the League of Nations Council to draw up the Constitution of the existing World Court, would be a guest of the President tomorrow at luncheon. The meeting between Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Root, the first since the former became President, was described as purely social, but it was assumed that the court question undoubtedly would be discussed.

Mr. Coolidge's declaration of foreign policy was received with interest by the diplomatic representatives of the various nations, and after he had returned from Arlington Ambassador Jusserand of France called at the White House to obtain a copy of the address.

PRESIDENT MEETS ISSUE

Declaration at Arlington Is Thought to Outline Campaign Policies.

NOT AGAINST RESERVATIONS

But Wants No Material Changes That the Many Other Nations Cannot Accept.

SEES AMERICA THE GAINER

We Must, However, Give Something, He Declares, in Exchange for the Benefits to Accrue to Us.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—America's entry into the World Court on the conditions proposed by President Harding and Secretary Hughes and a further limitation of armament were urged today by President Coolidge in his Memorial Day address over the graves of the nation's war dead in Arlington National Cemetery.

His declaration, which is generally considered to be a rebuke to the Republican leaders in the Senate and to outline the program on foreign affairs he intends to present for the approval of the people in the coming campaign, was delivered before an audience of 5,000 people, including foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, Cabinet officers, Senators and Representatives, and veterans who fought in the Civil War, the Spanish War and the World War.

The President, while making it clear that he would not oppose other reservations as such, said that he would not approve any "material changes which would probably not receive the consent of the many other signatory nations." He recalled how he had already endorsed the Harding reservations, and added:

"On that I stand."

Continuing, Mr. Coolidge said:

"We may as well face the question candidly, and if we are willing to assume these new duties in exchange for the benefits which would accrue to us, let us say so. If we are not willing, let us say that. We can accomplish nothing by taking a doubtful or ambiguous position.

"We are not going to be able to avoid meeting the world and bearing our part of the burdens of the world. We must meet those burdens and overcome them, or they will meet us and overcome us. For my part, I desire my country to meet them without evasion, without fear, in an upright, downright, square, American way."

Sees No Peril in Joining Court.

Apparently referring to Senator Lodge, Senator Pepper and the irreconcilable group, the President said:

"While there are those who think we would be exposed to peril by adhering to this Court, I am unable to attach great weight to their arguments. Whatever differences, whatever perils exist for us in the world will come anyway, whether we oppose or support the Court. I am one of those who believe we would be safer, and that we would be meeting our duties better, by supporting it and making every possible use of it."

Developing his suggestion for another conference for further limitation of armament, the President said:

"I believe in the maintenance of an army and navy, not for aggression, but for defense. Security and order are our most valuable possessions. They are cheap at any price. But I am opposed to every kind of military aggrandizement and to all forms of competitive armament. The ideal would be for nations to become parties to mutual covenants limiting their military establishments, and making it obvious that they are not maintained to menace each other. This ideal should be made practical as fast as possible."

After making his speech and participating in an elaborate program of exercises at Arlington, Mr. Coolidge and Secretary Weeks and Secretary Wilbur laid wreaths on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

The survivors of the three wars and the solid masses who filled the amphitheatre were enthusiastic over the two main points developed by the President; his declaration for American membership in the World Court and for an army and navy for defensive purposes, but with limitations agreed to by other nations. Each of these statements received an ovation. Other parts of his speech devoted to patriotic sentiments were also applauded generously.

Swanson Extols Declaration.

Senator Swanson, Democrat of Virginia, who has promised to make a minority report to the Senate, supporting the Harding-Hughes-Coolidge plan, said:

"I have read with much interest and appreciation the speech of President Coolidge on the World Court. Diplomatically but firmly he condemns the action of the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Relations in reporting the Pepper plan.

"He realizes the fact that the pushing of this plan can only result in delay and the defeat of all possibility of the United States adhering to the statute creating the World Court. He evidently has not been fooled by the Pepper plan despite the suavity and smoothness with

LAFOLLETTE HURRIES BACK TO WASHINGTON

Fears Defeat of Radical Measures—Will Make Them Campaign Issues.

FARM BILL SEEMS DOOMED

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Senator La Follette, leader of the Progressive group in the Senate, who has virtually announced that he will be an independent candidate for the Presidency, returned to Washington tonight unexpectedly from Atlantic City and is expected to be in his seat when the Senate meets tomorrow. He had cut two days off his intended stay at the shore.

It had been stated that Senator La Follette would return to the Senate next week. One thing which, it is understood, influenced him to hasten his return is a desire to do what he can to obtain the adoption of legislation for the relief of the farmers.

Senator La Follette appeared to be in sturdy physical condition, and it is said that he is anxious to make a vigorous campaign, if his plans to be nominated by petition for the Presidency are carried out. He went directly from the train to his home and would not make any statement.

Senator La Follette has been interested chiefly in the course of farm and railroad legislation in the Senate. It is understood that he had been advised within a few days that the Senate would probably adjourn on June 7 without taking decisive action on any of his pet measures.

Reports of this kind, it is said, caused him to come back before he had planned in the hope that he could bring enough influence to bear to get some farm bill passed. In any event, it is his intention to make a fight for it, and if he fails to obtain definite action he will carry his complaint against Congress into the campaign.

It is generally thought tonight that even with the help of La Follette the farm bloc in Senate and House which is demanding farm legislation before adjournment will be unable to get any radical measure through. It seems certain that the McNary-Haugen bill, proposing the creation of a $200,000,000 export grain corporation, will be defeated.

Senator La Follette, however, is expected to make as much capital as possible for his fight for the Presidency as an independent upon the fact that the Republicans and the Democrats have failed to pass farm relief bills of the sort he urges.

Say He Will Run as Independent.

CHICAGO, May 30. — The petitions asking Senator Robert M. La Follette

ASKS $131,943,138 TO MEET BONUS COST

ALLOTTED TO DEPARTMENTS

General Davis Says 2,517 Clerks Will Be Added to Payrolls for the Extra Work.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—A requisition on the Treasury for $131,943,138 to cover the costs of administration of the Soldier Bonus law in the first year of its operation, and to provide a sinking fund for the payment of service certificates authorized by it, is proposed in the Deficiency bill reported to the House today by the Committee on Appropriations. This bill, the second measure of the kind reported this session, carries a total of $158,196,417 to care for deficiencies for the fiscal year 1924 and prior years and to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year 1925.

Of this total $141,517,247 is due directly to new treaties or laws enacted at this session, the Bonus act being credited with the bulk of it. Additions to the Coast Guard to aid in prohibition enforcement call for $8,230,000; road construction in national parks, $1,000,000, and the treaty with Mexico for the settlement of claims, $171,930.

For administration of the bonus, $3,600,000 is allotted to the War Department, $1,188,500 to the Veterans' Bureau, $450,000 to the Navy Department and $75,240 to the General Accounting Office.

In addition to $100,000,000 set aside for an adjusted compensation fund, $26,629,398 is made available for cash payments to veteran beneficiaries and dependents. These are the amounts recommended by the Budget Bureau.

General Frank T. Hines, director of the Veterans' Bureau, told the committee the first problem of his organization is involved in the production and distribution of the first cash payments to men who receive less than $50, and then the distribution of quarterly payments to dependents of men who died before application was made. The cash payments amount to $18,000,000. Then will come the preparation of the adjusted pay certificates, the progress of which will depend on the rapidity with which the preliminary work is carried on by the War and Navy Departments.

Major Gen. Robert C. Davis, Adjutant General, in charge of the War Department's work, said he believed the administration in his department would cost more than the $3,600,000 recommended.

General Davis said the War Department was adding 2,517 clerks to its rolls to take care of the work incident to the Bonus law. This business will be directed by General Davis and twelve army officers detailed by the Secretary of War.

TAX BILL APPROVAL TODAY OR MONDAY

Coolidge Will Get Mellon Report Today and Prompt Signing Is Expected.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Secretary Mellon and General Lord, Director of the Budget, will present their report on the tax bill to President Coolidge tomorrow.

The information in Administration circles today was that the President, although opposed to several sections of the bill, would approve it within a short time, probably late Saturday or at the latest on Monday. It was said that his acceptance would be based upon the line of argument such as he used in approving the immigration bill.

President Coolidge is understood to be confident that Congress will be able to adjourn by June 7 with the most important of his recommendations acted upon.

France Orders Our Jazz Players Expelled; Acts On Protests by French Musicians

PARIS, May 30.—Between twenty and thirty American and English jazz band musicians, working in the most fashionable and expensive night clubs of Paris and the French seaside and health resorts, received notice today that they must quit French soil within five days. Others are expecting a similar order tomorrow.

The notice was given to the men individually by the Paris Prefecture of Police. All their papers, except their passports, were taken from them and they received in exchange a green slip telling them on what day they must leave France and where to report before leaving.

This order, it is stated, comes from the Ministry of Labor. Once or twice before there has been a protest from French musicians against the presence in Paris of foreign players, but these protets always fell through when, on inquiry, it was found that, with the dancing craze in full swing, no good French jazz players were out of work and that as a result of the high-priced American immigration those in work were now getting three or four times their former earnings.

The new order, therefore, has come as a surprise. Paris is at the height of the season, and in the dancing clubs of Montmartre, the Rue Caumartin and the Rue Daunou 80 per cent. of the clients are American and British. For the pleasure of dancing to a real American jazz band they are willing to pay 150 francs for champagne, of which the cost price is 20 francs, the State taxes 50 francs and the profits to the establishments 50 francs.

Some of the expelled men years ago received authorization to do their work here as musicians, but these authorizations were taken from them today, along with their identity papers. The only reason for the expulsion instanced is an order of April 2, 1917. Many of the cases are likely to go very hard if the men are forced to leave the country. Some have families here. One recently started a business for the exportation of French musical instruments to America, and now that he has had his identity paper taken from him he cannot remain, even should he give up playing in an orchestra.

French directors of the dancing clubs admit tonight that without the American jazz musicians they will not be able to do so much business. M. Cornuche, who directs the casinos of Deauville and Cannes and has for years employed Billy Arnold's famous band, was the first to admit that the American musicians could never be replaced by French.

All the men affected had their papers in proper order, and many of them did service here in France in the war. There are two cases of men wounded in France, and resident here since just after the Armistice. It seems scarcely credible that at the height of the foreign tourist season such an order will be maintained.

Fist Fight Suspends Italian Parliament; Socialists Resent Being Called 'That Gang'

ROME, May 30 (Associated Press).—A reference by Signor Giunta, Nationalist Deputy, to the Socialists as "that gang" in the Chamber today caused a general exchange of fisticuffs between members of the Right and Left.

Discussing the return of the old standing rule, Signor Giunta declared he felt himself a representative of the old Fascismo, in which capacity he wished to recall the impositions, insults and violence sustained from "that gang." He pointed toward the benches where the Socialists and followers of former Premier Nitti were sitting.

General Benoivenga, newly elected on the Opposition ticket, rushed to the centre of the chamber, followed by Giovanni Amendola, Fascist. A general exchange of blows followed, during which the General fell to the floor and after which the sitting was suspended.

When the session was resumed, the President of the Chamber, Signor Rocco, deplored the incident and urged calm and moderation. Signor Giunta resumed his address, but the Socialist Deputies left the hall in protest.

which it was presented and the protestation of fealty to the World Court.

"I have no doubt that the proponents of the Pepper plan are very much astonished and disappointed, as they, no doubt, expected that the President would extend to it an approval and thus destroy all chances of favorable action at the present session of the Senate and then when all action failed would use the proposed Pepper plan as an excuse for broken platform promises and to answer the purposes of the impending campaign.

"I am glad that the President refused to be a party to this deception and to stand for this fake plan which can never receive the approval of other nations. Its favorable recommendation by a majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations could only result in defeating favorable action and by doing so deceive the public and give a fictitious appearance of being favorable to the World Court."

Text of the President's Speech.

President Coolidge's speech was as follows:

We meet again upon this hallowed ground to commemorate those who played their part in a particular outbreak of an age-old conflict.

Many men have many theories about the struggle that went on from 1861 to 1865. Some say it had for its purpose the abolition of slavery. President Lincoln did not so consider it. There were those in the South who would have been willing to wage war for its continuation, but I very much doubt if the South as a whole could have been persuaded to take up arms for that purpose. There were those in the North who would have been willing to wage war for its abolition, but the North as a whole could not have been persuaded to take up arms for that purpose.

President Lincoln made it perfectly clear that his effort was to save the Union—with slavery if he could save it that way; without slavery if he could save it that way, but he would save the Union. The South stood for the principle of the sovereignty of the States. The North stood for the principle of the supremacy of the Union.

This was an age-old conflict. At its foundation lies the question of how can the Government govern and the people be free? How can organized society make and enforce laws and the individual remain independent? There is no short-sighted answer to these inquiries.

Whatever may have been the ambiguity in the Federal Constitution, of course the Union had to be supreme within its sphere or cease to be a Union. It was also certain and obvious that each State had to be sovereign within its sphere or cease to be a State. It is equally clear that a Government must govern, must prescribe and enforce laws within its sphere, or cease to be a Government.

Moreover, the individual must be independent and free within his own sphere, or cease to be an individual. The fundamental question was then, is now, and always will be, through what adjustments, by what actions these principles may be applied.

It needs but very little consideration to reach the conclusion that all of these terms are relative, not absolute, in their application to the affairs of this earth. There is no absolute and complete sovereignty for a State, nor absolute and complete independence and freedom for an individual. It happened in 1861 that the States of the North and the South were so fully agreed among themselves that they were able to combine against each other.

Says Conflict Means Destruction.

But supposing each State of the Unic should undertake to make its own decisions upon all questions, and that all held divergent views. If such a condition were carried to its logical conclusion each would come into conflict with all the others, and a condition would arise which could only result in mutual destruction.

It is evident that this would be the antithesis of State sovereignty. Or suppose that each individual in the assertion of his own independence and freedom undertook to act in entire disregard of the rights of others. The end would be likewise mutual destruction, and no one would be independent and no one would be free. Yet these are conflicts which have gone on ever since the organization of society into government, and they are going on now. To my mind this was fundamental of the conflict which broke out in 1861.

The thirteen Colonies were not unaware of the difficulties which these problems presented. We shall find a great deal of wisdom in the method by which they dealt with them. When they were finally separated from Great Britain the allegiance of their citizens was not to the nation, for there was none. It was to the States. For the conduct of the war there had been a voluntary confederacy loosely constructed and practically impotent.

Continuing after peace was made, when the common peril which had been its chief motive no longer existed, it grew weaker and weaker. Each of the States could have insisted on an entirely separate and independent existence, having full authority over both their internal and external affairs, sovereign in every way.

But such sovereignty would have been a vain and empty thing. It would have been unsupported by adequate resources either of property or population, without a real national spirit, ready to fall prey to foreign intrigue or foreign conquest. That kind of sovereignty meant but little. It had no substance in it. The people and their leaders naturally sought for a larger, more inspiring ideal. They realized that, while to be a citizen of a State meant something, it meant a great deal more if that State were a part of a national union.

The establishment of a Federal Constitution giving power and authority to create a real national Government did not in the end mean a detriment, but rather an increment to the sovereignty of the several States. Under the Constitution there was brought into being a new relationship, which did not detract from, but added to, the power and the position of each State.

Received More Than They Gave.

It is true that they surrendered the privilege of performing certain acts for themselves, like the regulation of commerce and the maintenance of foreign relations, but in becoming a part of the Union, they received more than they gave.

The same thing applies to the individual in organized society. When each citizen submits himself to the authority of law he does not thereby decrease his independence or freedom, but rather increases it. By recognizing that he is a part of a larger body which is banded together for a common purpose, he becomes more than an individual, he rises to a new dignity of citizenship; instead of finding himself restricted and confined by rendering obedience to public law, he finds himself protected and defended and in the exercise of increased and increasing rights.

It is true that as civilization becomes more complex it is necessary to surrender more and more of the freedom of action and live more and more according to the rule of public regulation, but it is also true that the rewards and privileges which come to a member of organized society increase in a still greater proportion.

Primitive life has its freedom and its attraction, but the observance of the restrictions of modern civilization enhances the privileges of living a thousand fold.

Perhaps I have said enough to indicate the great advantages that accrue to all of us by the support and maintenance of our Government, the continuation of the functions of legislation, the administration of justice and the execution of the laws.

There can be no substitute for these, no securing of greater freedom by their downfall and failure, but only disorganization, suffering and want, and final destruction. All that we have of rights accure from the Government under which we live.

In these days little need exists for extolling the blessings of our Federal Union. Its benefits are known and recognized by all its citizens who are worthy of serious attention. No one thinks now of attempting to destroy the Union by armed force. No one seriously considers withdrawing from it.

But it is not enough that I should be free from attack—it must be approved and supported by a national spirit. Our prime allegiance must be to the whole country. The sentiment of sectionalism is not harmless because it is unarmed. Resistance to the righteous authority of Federal law is not innocent because it is not accompanied by secession.

We need a more definite realization that all of our country must stand or fall together, and that it is the duty of the Government to promote the welfare of each part and the duty of the citizen to remember that he must be first of all an American.

Calls for Renunciation.

Only one conclusion appears to me possible, we shall not promote our welfare by a narrow and short sighted policy. We can gain nothing by way of destruction of government or society. That action which in the long run is for the advantage of the individual, as it is for the support of our union, is best summed up in a single word—renunciation.

It is only by surrendering a certain amount of our liberty, only by taking on new duties and assuming new obligations, that we make that progress which we characterize as civilization. It is only in like manner that the citizens and the States can maintain our Federal union and become partakers of its glory.

That is the answer to every herald of discontent, and to every preacher of destruction.

While this is understood American institutions and the American union are secure.

This principle cannot be too definitely or emphatically proclaimed. American citizenship is a high estate. He who holds it is the peer of kings. It has been secured only by untold toil and effort. It will be maintained by no other method.

It demands the best that men and women have to give. But it likewise awards to its partakers the best that there is on earth. To attempt to turn it into a thing of ease and inaction would be only to debase it. To cease to struggle and toil and sacrifice for it is not only to cease to be worthy of it, but is to start a retreat toward barbarism.

No matter what others may say, no matter what others may do, this is the stand that those must maintain who are worthy to be called Americans.

But that great struggle was carried on by those whom this day is set apart to commemorate, not only for the preservation of the Union. The authority of the Federal Government had been resisted by armed force. They were also striving to restore peace.

It must be remembered that our Republic was organized to avoid and discourage war, and to promote and establish peace. It is the leading characteristic of our national holidays that they are days of peace. The ways of our people are the ways of peace. They naturally seek ways to make peace more secure.

It is not to be inferred that it would be anything less than courting national disaster to leave our country barren of defense. Human nature is a very constant quality. While there is justification for hoping and believing that we are moving towards perfection, it would be idle and absurd to assume that we have already reached it. We cannot disregard history. There have been and will be domestic disorders. There have been and will be tendencies of one nation to encroach on another.

I believe in the maintenance of an army and navy, not for aggression, but for defense. Security and order are our most valuable possessions. They are cheap at any price. But I am opposed to every kind of military aggrandisement and to all forms of competitive armament. The ideal would be for nations to become parties to mutual covenants limiting their military establishment, and making it obvious that they are maintained not to menace each other. This ideal should be made practical as fast as possible

Calls for Entry Into World Court.

Our nation has associated itself with other great powers for the purpose of promoting peace in the regions of the Pacific Ocean.

It has steadily refused to accept the covenant of the League of Nations, but long before that was thought of, before the opening of the present century we were foremost in promoting the calling of a conference at The Hague to provide for a tribunal of arbitration for the settlement of international disputes.

We have many treaties on that basis with other nations.

But we have an opportunity before us to reassert our desire and to lend the force of our example for the peaceful adjudication of differences between nations. Such action would be in entire harmony with the policy which we have long advocated.

I do not look upon it as a certain guarantee against war, but it would be a method of disposing of troublesome questions, an accumulation of which leads to irritating conditions and results in mutually hostile sentiments.

More than a year ago President Harding proposed that the Senate should authorize our adherence to the Protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice, with certain conditions. His suggestion has already had my approval.

On that I stand.

I should not oppose other reservations, but any material changes which would not probably receive the consent of the many other nations would be impracticable. We cannot take a step in advance of this kind without assuming certain obligations. Here again if we receive anything we must surrender something.

We may as well face the question candidly and if we are willing to assume these new duties in exchange for the benefits which would accrue to us, let us say so.

If we are not willing, let us say that. We can accomplish nothing by taking a doubtful or ambiguous position.

We are not going to be able to avoid meeting the world and bearing our part in the affairs of the world.

We must meet those burdens and overcome them, or they will meet us and overcome us.

For my part, I desire my country to meet them without evasion and without fear in an upright, downright, square American way.

While there are those who think we would be exposed to peril by adhering to this Court, I am unable to attach great weight to their arguments.

Whatever differences, whatever perils exist for us in the world will come anyway, whether we oppose or support the Court.

Thinks Us Safer In Than Out.

I am one of those who believe we would be safer and that we would be meeting our duties better by supporting it and making every possible use of it.

I feel confident that such action would make a greater America; that it would be productive of a higher and finer national spirit and of a more complete national life.

It is these two thoughts of union and peace which appear to me to be especially appropriate for our consideration on this day. Like all else in human experience, they are not things which can be set apart and have an independent existence. They exist by reason of the concrete actions of men and women.

It is the men and women whose actions between 1861 and 1865 gave us union and peace that we are met here this day to commemorate.

When we seek for the chief characteristic of those actions, we come back to the word which I have already uttered—renunciation. They gave up ease and home and safety, and braved every impending danger and mortal peril that they might accomplish these ends. They thereby became in this Republic a body of citizens set apart and marked for every honor so long as our nation shall endure.

Here on this wooded eminence, overlooking the capital of the country for which they fought, many of them repose, officers of high rank and privates mingling in a common dust, holding the common veneration of a grateful people.

The heroes of other wars lie with them, and in a place of great preeminence lies one whose identity is unknown, save that he was a soldier of this Republic who fought that its ideals, its institutions, its liberties, might be perpetuated among men.

Nation's Priceless Heritage.

A grateful country holds all these services as her most priceless heritage, to be cherished forevermore.

We can testify to these opinions, not by our words, but by our actions. Our country cannot exist on the renunciation of the heroic souls of the past.

Public service, from the action of the humblest voter to the most exalted office, cannot be made a mere matter of hire and salary.

The supporters of our institutions must be inspired by a more dominant motive than a conviction that their actions are going to be profitable.

We cannot lower our standards to what we think will pay, but we must raise them to what we think is right.

It is only in that direction that we shall find true patriotism.

It is only by that method that we can maintain the rights of the individual, the sovereignty of the States, the integrity of the Union, the permanency of peace and the welfare of mankind.

You soldiers of the Republic enrolled under her banner that your sacrifices there might be an atonement for the evils of your day.

That is the standard of citizenship for all time.

It is the requirement which must be met by those who hold public place. There must be the ideal of those who are worthy to share in the glory which you have given to the name of America, the ideal of those who hold fellowship with Washington and Lincoln.

MEMORIAL SERVICE MARRED BY 'K. K. K.'

Wreath With Klan Initials Put on Monument to Catholics Killed in War.

PRIEST BLOCKS FIST FIGHT

American Legion Member Defends Emblem—Hicksville Passes an Anxious Night.

HICKSVILLE, L. I., May 30.—Because the three Hicksville boys who were killed in the World War were members of the Knights of Columbus, it was agreed that the local council of the Knights of Columbus was to have charge of the Memorial Day parade here today. But the Ku Klux Klan, or its sympathizers, took a hand in the matter, and in consequence this village is anxious tonight following a quarrel over the discovery of a "K. K. K." wreath at the base of the monument to the dead boys.

When the paraders reached the monument they were amazed to see the "K. K. K." wreath reposing there. One of them advanced and was about to remove the wreath, when a member of the American Legion restrained him. Then it was decided to have Constable August Fassbender remove the wreath.

Objection was made the second time by the American Legion member and in the melée that followed the wreath was trampled upon and destroyed.

When a fist fight seemed imminent Rev. Father Francis Xavier Woods, pastor of St. Ignatius Roman Catholic Church, jumped into the breach and ordered the paraders to withdraw. In a few chosen words he said the ceremonies were under the direction of the Knights of Columbus, and he deplored the action of some "outsiders" in putting a wreath on the monument while the paraders were absent.

An investigation was begun and it was learned that during the absence of the paraders a florist's wagon drove up to the monument and the "K. K. K." wreath was left there. The wagon hastily drove away.

The constable remained near the monument tonight to prevent a recurrence of the quarrel, and small groups of men were gathered on various corners in the vicinity. There is a tense feeling all over town.

In the parade were veterans of the World War, members of the local council of the Knights of Columbus, Daughters of Isabella, school children and more than 100 boys from St. John's Home here. They paraded through town and then to Plain Cemetery, where the exercises were held. The disorder occurred when they returned.

SCORES THE PEPPER PLAN.

Judge Baldwin Calls It Out of Harmony With American Interests.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 30.—Simeon E. Baldwin, former Chief Justice and Governor of Connecticut, declared today that the Pepper World Court plan is out of harmony with the best interests of America. Judge Baldwin, who held the chair of jurisprudence in Yale for nearly forty years, said:

"A great power should not be disunited in the conduct of foreign relations. In Great Britain long experience has convinced that country that a change of administration, unless in very peculiar cases, shall not involve a change of policy toward other countries. A new Government keeps the attitude of their predecessors in office unless there are the strongest reasons against it or the people have had an opportunity to signify their wishes to the contrary.

"President Coolidge communicated to the Senate last Winter his proposed action in regard to the World Court. The subject is a delicate one, but it is one in which the whole world is concerned. To make an agreement involves giving compromises and concessions. Some of the powers are practically less able than others to enter into the necessary negotiations as to such matters, for want of sufficient knowledge of the historical setting which gives them character and interpretation. It would be, however, poor policy for us to make that point in support of the Treaty of Versailles.

"It was almost a miracle that this treaty was ever negotiated. But it was in fact done. It would risk the peace of the world to undo it. Putting an American Judge on the Court was a great achievement of American statesmen. It might not be an easy thing, should John Bassett Moore resign or die, to replace him.

"The question ought not to be considered as if the Court had never been organized. It has already done important work in the exercise of jurisdiction assented to by the public opinion of the world. This opinion is being created still. It must, in its nature, be the product of evolution. Let us give it a fair trial. The plan of General Pepper is complicated. It ignores what has already been accomplished. We paid the price for that in the great war. Let us not lose the benefit of victory. Peace that is permanent cannot be had without some such institution. This World Court is the best of the three institutions proposed."

CIVIL WAR VETERAN ROUTS 12 KU KLUXERS

Armed With a Cane, He Defies Them to Put Wreath on Soldiers' Monument.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 30.—S. Foster Black, former Deputy United States Marshal and a veteran of the Civil War, using a cane made from timber of Andersonville Prison, dispersed a dozen Ku Klux Klansmen in regalia, but unmasked, who gathered in Courthouse Square early today to place a wreath on the Soldiers and Sailors Monument.

The wreath was in place and the Klansmen were kneeling about the monument when Mr. Black saw the letters "K. K. K." on the flowers. He demanded to know the men's authority for placing the decoration on the monument, and when the Klansmen declined to enlighten him removed the wreath and locked it in the courthouse basement.

The Klansmen appealed to the Sheriff, who questioned Mr. Black. The veteran in no uncertain tones informed the Sheriff that veterans of the Civil War held a perpetual lease upon the monument and the ground upon which it stands. In the meantime he had scattered the Klansmen and, armed with a cane, stood guard in front of the monument.

"This cane," he declared, "was made from timbers taken from Andersonville Prison. I was a prisoner there and I made my escape. I know this is mighty good wood. If anyone doubts it let him try to put that wreath back on the monument."

Mr. Black still was on guard tonight, and the only flowers on the monument were placed there by the veterans themselves.

HUNT BANDIT CAPTORS OF FOUR MISSIONARIES

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HONGKONG, May 30.—The Chinese captain of the motor boat belonging to the Stout Memorial Hospital, which was boarded by pirates as it was proceeding up the Cassia River for Wuchow to Kweilin, where twenty missionaries are believed to be in danger, has escaped and returned to Wuchow.

He reports that 300 brigands, all ex-soldiers, attacked and routed the escort of eighty soldiers. A Chinese gunboat passed and fired a few shots, but did not stop. The brigands then boarded the motor boat and demanded £100, firearms, goldleaf, &c. When military reinforcements arrived, however, the pirates abandoned the motor boat, which they had ransacked, and carried off the four missionaries on board toward the hills. The soldiers followed in pursuit.

SAY MAJOR STOLE $18,000 TO GAMBLE

BLAME PUT ON BACCARAT

Played With "Marquis of Queensberry" and Another Man, It Is Said.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Playing baccarat with the "Marquis of Queensberry" and a man named Morrell, described as "two well-known international characters," was the cause of the plight of Major F. E. McCammon, a military attaché of the American Embassy at Santiago, Chile, who is on trial here before a court martial on a charge of embezzlement, according to testimony given before the House Appropriations Committee by Colonel W. K. Naylor, Assistant Chief of Staff, United States Army.

The case was brought to the attention of the committee as a result of a request made by the Secretary of War that he be empowered to make good certain checks drawn by Major McCammon without authority on banks in Chile and foreign branches of American banks. The amount involved is a little more than $18,000. Major McCammon acted as a disbursing officer at the Santiago Embassy without bond. Colonel Naylor testified that his credit with the War Department was not sufficient to cover the amount of his shortage.

Colonel Naylor told the committee that an investigation of the McCammon case made by the military attaché of the American Embassy in Brazil disclosed that gambling led to Major McCammon's troubles.

Confronted with the shortage on his arrival in Washington, having been summoned here by his superior officers, Major McCammon was told that he would be given every opportunity to make it good. The Major retained counsel, who tried to obtain an agreement that the Secretary of War would permit him to resign if he discharged his obligation to the Government.

Colonel Naylor advised against such an agreement. Referring to the court-martial proceedings against Major McCammon, Colonel Naylor said:

"This is an open-and-shut case. There is no question but what he will be fully punished, and it is a question of maintaining our good name in Chile."

Colonel Naylor told the committee that great care was exercised in the selection of officers for detail to foreign embassies.

"They are supposed to be some of your highest grade men," a member of the committee suggested.

"Yes, sir," replied Colonel Naylor. "This particular man was an attaché when I took over the office, and there was nothing in his action at the outset to indicate that there was anything wrong, and afterward we looked over his official record, and that was all right. But, according to our investigations, he got taken in by the "Marquis of Queensberry" and a man by the name of Morrell, two well-known international characters, and they got him into a baccarat game and fleeced him."

KLAN IS ASSAILED BY EX-GOV. WALTON

Impeached Oklahoma Executive Charges Many Crimes to Organization.

Describing the Ku Klux Klan as the "biggest cowards that ever walked," former Governor Jack C. Walton of Oklahoma, who is a candidate for the United States Senatorship, addressed an assembly of about 1,500 people last night at the Sinai Temple, 951 Stebbins Avenue, the Bronx. To prevent any interference with the meeting, policemen guarded the main entrance to the temple, while a number of plain clothes men were scattered among the crowd.

The ex-Governor, who spoke at the invitation of the Rev. Dr. J. J. Price, Rabbi of the temple, described his experiences with the Klan before and after his impeachment, and declared that to stop the crimes of the Klan he sacrificed the highest office in the State.

While he recounted some of the crimes that he said had been committed against the women of Oklahoma, some of the women in the audience cried out and others wept. The ex-Governor declared that if he had had the support of the people in New York, he would have "driven all the Klan into the Gulf of Mexico."

"Innocent men and women have been railroaded to prison in Oklahoma," he said," without a fair and impartial trial. This has been done through Klan jury commissioners, court clerks, sheriffs, prosecutors and judges. The unlawful organization is threatening the very foundation upon which our civilization rests, and it is to the interest of every good citizen who believes in the American spirit of fair play to see that Klansmen are not elected for any national, State, district, county or city office."

The ex-Governor made public many letters from his file, and one, addressed to the "Emperor of the Invisible Empire," in Atlanta, Ga., in which he declined a free life membership in the Klan, brought applause.

Charles Williams of Oklahoma, who preceded the ex-Governor, warned the congregation against the Klan. "You've got them here in New York," he asserted, "spreading hate against the Jew and Catholic." He said they were making an attempt to elect the next President, and spoke of the efforts they would make to win through propaganda at the two approaching national conventions.

BISHOP BROWN TELLS OF CHANGED VIEWS

twelve parishes under me and built forty-nine churches."

Bishop Brown told of some of the earlier books he had written, and went on:

"In those days I was troubled by the fact that I could do nothing for the colored people. I decided to establish a separate episcopate for them. Perhaps that is where my heresy began—I don't know. You see, I said the colored people were the children of God just as we were. I thought if I gave the colored people a church they would have to look largely to themselves for development.

"One of my first heresies, I suppose, was in believing that two Bishops might serve in one diocese; that each group with a different language might be entitled to its own Bishop; that in New York, for instance, they might have a dozen Bishops, and that in all the dioceses of the South there should be two Bishops if we wanted to reach the colored people. This was considered so serious that it was held to be radical. In fact, they almost railroaded me out of Boston because of it.

"The next heresy was pretty serious, though I reached the conclusion that there was only one Christianity, and that each Church was the interpreter of that Christianity on the same level as all the other Churches. Of course, I considered the Episcopalian Church the best, as one collegian might think his college better than another. I had no doubt of that.

"Then I went on to say that the Church of the Anglican Communion could make no more of a divine claim for existence than the others. So I advocated that we all come together on the same footing.

Bishops Burned His Book.

"Well, those were just short steps, but Bishops and churchmen began writing to me and condemning my level plan of Church union. That was in 1910. Some Bishops burned the book—said they would not have it in their library. All condemned me, and that troubled me a great deal. Well, my father was Scotch and my mother was Irish, and you know that kind don't give in at once. So I studied to defend myself.

"In 1911 I took a vacation, thinking that if I remained away for two years I would return in restored health to my diocese. Do you know that for my mild heresy in my book, 'The Crucial Race Question,' a New York churchman was going to recommend me for trial? But Bishop Potter had a way with him, and the matter was dropped.

"Where was I at? Oh, yes, I thought I would have trouble on account of my level plan for Church union. A physician I knew suggested that I study Darwin. I graduated from my seminary out of alignment with my brethren and it seemed to me that I ought to study every defense of Christianity."

Presiding Bishop Murray showed a little impatience and the witness waved a hand in his direction. Smiling, he said: "I won't hang on long. Just cut me short any time you want to when you think I'm getting to be too garrulous. I guess I'm like a preacher, departing from my text."

His counsel urged Bishop Brown to continue, and he went on:

"Well, I guessed I'd study Darwin. I'd preached against him all my life and I hadn't read him. That's not so strange as you might think. Call on average clergyman to the stand and ask him if that's not so. They think they know everything. I preached against Darwin and Darwinism many a time. You see, I had a seminary attitude toward Darwin. I had great respect for doctors of divinity, especially for LL. D.'s.

Found Darwin a "Revelation."

"When I read Darwin it was all a perfect revelation to me. I didn't know what to do. I saw that I was altogether out of line with things. It all seemed reasonable. I went on from book to book. First it was 'The Descent of Man,' then 'The Origin of Species,' and then I went on to Huxley's books. Guess I read 'em all. Spencer, too.

"Finally I got down to Haeckel, the German biologist. He was dreadful. I read all his books—read everything I could lay my hands on. The world of science was a new revelation to me.

"I saw that the history of the world could be divided into two periods, the pre-Darwinian period of traditional supernaturalisms, and the post-Darwinian period which began a new world. It was impossible for me to go back. I now lived in an age of naturalistic science, and there was no possibility of bringing the old age up to the new.

"Then came the problem, 'How can I remain in the Church and go on to the short end of my life?' I didn't expect to live much longer. So I began to study how that was possible. I thought, 'surely I'm not a learned man, surely I will get help from those men, college graduates, who are more learned than I.' I had a big list of men interested in church union and I wrote to them all.

"In the meantime I had taught astronomy in the high school at Gallon during my vacation. Astronomy upset my orthodoxy altogether. I had set my heart, as we all do, on getting to heaven, but after I studied astronomy I wondered how I would get there.

"You see, 'How could I go through space for millions of years at 240 below zero, even if I traveled at the rate of light, 186,000 miles a second, and get to heaven?' 'Are you here going to condemn me for thinking that?

Asked Advice From Learned Men.

"I sought advice. I called on the most learned man in the Church, the man of whom I depended most of all. What do you suppose the Bishop told me as to how to get to heaven? He reproved me for not knowing the Einstein theory: that I could go somewhere without going anywhere. That's the strongest answer I got. It would be an interesting thing to get those replies published. They would show the utter bankruptcy of this whole thing. My heart sank down and I felt that with the knowledge I had it was not possible to save myself from heresy."

The presiding Bishop suggested that witness keep to the straight narrative of his testimony and Mr. Sharts asked Bishop Brown to explain the effect that the World War had on his thought.

"The war?" asked the witness. "Oh, yes, I'll come to that. When you want me to stop just say so. I'll only take a minute, a preacher's minute.

"You see, I had been a sort of Rip Van Winkle and I had never heard anything of socialism. It was because I had worked hard as a boy on the farm, my life was not easy at all. The first soft thing I got was when I went into the ministry.

"I thought during the war that if the Germans were half so bad as they were painted they ought to be licked, but I didn't see why we should need to do it. I knew it would mean a lot more orphans in this country, as it did. So I wrote to the bishops about it. Do you know, every mother's son of them was for the war. It discouraged me a lot. To feel that my own church would promote war made me feel discouraged.

"Then I saw an article in a paper and it intimated that all wars had more or less connection with economics, money matters. I thought that could not be; that all wars had something to do with principles, Fourteen Points, and things like that.

Talked With a Socialist.

"I wrote to the writer of that article, and he said that if I met a Socialist it would do me good. So I looked up one in Galion and talked with him. Then I sent to St. Louis for a paper, 'The Ripsaw.' In those days I felt like ripping everything up, as I got many letters attacking me. I sent $2 and got an armful of literature which was another revelation. I found that as natural law governed in the biological field it also governed in the sociological field.

"There's no room for superstition in this age. I said to myself, 'How can I stay in the Church? I've lost out on the supernatural.'

"I made an examination of everything under Heaven by means of which I could remain in the Church. I reached a conclusion that the whole thing, our whole thought and belief about these things would have to be reconstructed if we wanted to feel right about it. I wondered how I could remain in the Church and reject the existence of a personal God and of the whole system resting on two Adams. Then I did reach a conclusion.

"I then remembered that I had never preached about a miracle without making a parable out of it. Up to that time I had never noticed the—the—what Mr. Schroeder would call the psychology of it. Why can't I make a parable of heaven (there is none) and bring it to earth. Why can't I make a parable of hell (there is none, but I suppose the orthodox don't know it yet) and bring it to earth? That's what I did.

"Then I became a Socialist and that brought me into a new world. Marx brought in a new world, just as Darwin had done. Finally I wrote that book."

"Wrote the Whole Book."

"You wrote this whole book?" asked Mr. Sharts, exhibiting a copy of "Communism and Christianism."

"Yes, I wrote the whole book from beginning to end," asserted the witness, lifting his voice almost to a shout, and Mr. Sharts placed the book in evidence.

"What was your purpose in writing the book?" the lawyer asked.

"To tell the truth as I understood it," replied Bishop Brown. "The only thing upon which the salvation of the world is dependent is the truth. But some people want to deny me the liberty to preach and teach the truth as I see it."

In writing the book, the Bishop explained, he interpreted the Scriptures symbolically, not literally.

"Do you believe in the Book of Common Prayer?" counsel inquired.

With a wave of his hand toward the court, the defendant replied dramatically. "There is not on bishop here that believes it more."

"You believe the Bible from Genesis to Revelations?"

"I haven't any trouble at all about that."

Phrase by phrase, Mr. Sharts uttered the Apostles' Creed, and at the end of each phrase the witness said, "I believe."

In reply to another question Bishop Brown said he believed the Nicene Creed.

"I not only believe every one of those things, but I believe them ten times more than I did in the orthodox days," the witness declared fervently, his upraised arm emphasizing his assertion.

"In writing this book did you propose to attack religion?" asked Mr. Sharts.

"No."

"What was your purpose?"

"To bring religion to a basis where it might be possible for every one to accept it."

Mr. Sharts smiled, turned to Charles L. Dibble, the church advocate, and invited him to cross-examine, but it was decided to cross-examine Bishop Brown tomorrow.

Counsel Outlines Bishop's Defense.

When the session opened this morning the Court overruled the motion to dismiss the indictment for heresy. Mr. Sharts then made the following statement as to the things he intended to prove:

"(1) The doctrines relied upon by the prosecution have in no way been controverted by the teachings and writings of Bishop Brown.

"(2) Those teachings and writings are all based upon a belief in not only the doctrines here relied upon, but upon all the Prayer Book, all the Holy Scriptures, and all utterances, official and unofficial, of the Church. As to quantity, the defendant's belief surpasses that of his accusers and of other recognized spokesmen.

"(3) We are going to show that the controversy is not over what the defendant believes but how he believes.

"(4) We expect to prove to the satisfaction of this Court that belief is not here defined in the teachings of this Church as to quality; only as to quantity. Its constituent elements have never been dissected. The different forms of its manifestations have never been analyzed in doctrines of the Church. Principles of psychology have never been discussed.

"(5) We expect to prove that belief is a mental process; that only within recent years have the laws of this mental process been discovered; that this is a problem in psychology, not in theology.

"(6) We expect to put upon the stand a famous psychologist and psychoanalyst, Mr. Theodore Shroeder. We shall demonstrate through him the principles of scientific psychology. We shall show that mind is capable of at least two forms of thought, subjective and objective.

"We shall show that in ancient times, when the doctrines of the Church were formulated, there was no comprehension of this distinction in mental processes. Primitive man bulks the whole mental process together in one mass and calls it belief.

"What he literally sees objectively and what he visions only subjectively are all one to the savage.

"When the departed return to him in dreams, they are, for him, the same as the former objectivity.

"This confusion between subjective and objective impressions is characteristic of the child-mind everywhere, of the child-mind of the race, of the child-mind of the individual, so that a little child cannot distinguish between dream and waking impressions.

Points to Changed Meanings.

"(7) We expect to show that at the time the statements of doctrine were formulated the words chosen were and must have been chosen in a primitive sense; that the mental content of words changes from age to age with the mental development of the race; that the meaning of the words used by the founders of our doctrine was a very different meaning from that which we derive from the same words today; that this changing mental content of words is in obedience to a law of nature as irresistible as the movement of the planets; that it is impossible for any of us to accept any of the words, for example, of the Apostles' Creed, in the same sense exactly as they conveyed to those who wrote them back in the first or second or third century A. D.; that the mental content of the words in old Greek or old Latin could not be the same exactly as in modern English, in any event; that the mental content of such words or phrases as 'God, the Father Almighty,' or 'maker of Heaven and earth,' or of 'Jesus Christ, His only begotten Son, our Lord,' or of such words as 'conceived of the Holy Ghost,' or 'born of the Virgin Mary,' or 'dead and buried,' or 'hell,' or 'rose again from the dead' was vastly different from now.

"(8) We expect to show that the individual mental content of words is equally incapable of being standardized, that you and I get a different mental content out of the same words; that if the Church could get any hundred people, with minds cast exactly in the same mold, so that they could repeat the Apostles' Creed and get the same mental process out of it, we should have a miracle greater than when Moses with a wave of his hand made all the swarms of locusts go and drown themselves in the sea, or turn all the rivers into blood.

"(9) That the only possible uniformity of doctrine is one which leaves in each individual member liberty to accept the words according to his own individual grasp of them. We seek to vindicate liberty or thought within the forms of faith.

"(10) We expect to place upon the stand an expert upon the history of the Church, the Rev. Mr. Arthur Whatham, and will show by him:

"That the right we seek to maintain here today has always been accorded to the Church heretofore from earliest times; that even in the third century there were some who accepted portions of the Scripture and of the creeds in a symbolic or figurative, and some in a literal or objective sense; that as long as they believed the formularies the Church never undertook to dictate how they must believe them, the Church never prescribed the quality of belief, but concerned itself only with the quantity; that all down through the centuries the exponents of the Church's doctrines have exercised the liberty of choice between subjectitve and objective beliefs; that today, in England and America, the Church's divines are exercising that same liberty of choice as to quality of belief provided they can agree on the quantity.

Calls Trial a Radical Departure.

"(11) By this means we hope to convince this court that what this action seeks to do is a most radical departure from the accepted standard of doctrine. They seek now to impose upon the brains of the members of our clergy a fixed and narrow uniformity in not only the outward forms of belief, not only in the words of belief, but even in the mental content of the words—a sheer physical impossibility, the mere attempt to do which will destroy this church.

"(12) We will go further. We expect to show by testimony of an expert in the study of archeology, who is familiar with the records of ancient civilizations, Colonel E. S. West, that the early founders of our faith must have used many of the words of our doctrine in purely a symbolic or figurative sense, because from the astrological learning of Babylon and Egypt they were familiar with various versions of the sun myth. They knew that there had been many savior gods in India, in Persia, in Egypt, Horus, Thammuz, Mithras, Krishna, all born of virgins, dying for the sins of the world, going down into hell, ascending again, and taking their seats in the heavens.

"That the sect of Essenes or Therapeutae was probably the source out of which most of the doctrines of Christianism sprang, and this sect was learned in the lore of India and the teachings of Krishna.

"We shall show by him that upon the inner walls of the temple at Luxor in Thebes, 1,600 years before the Christian era, there was portrayed the virgin birth of Amenhept III., the adoration of the angelic hosts and the wise men, and that this knowledge was extant throughout the Mediterranean.

"(13) Finally, we shall put Bishop Brown on the stand. We shall show what his life and services to the Church have been, how he came to write his book; how he sought for methods of reconciling the revelations of modern science with those of religion, and how he finally arrived at a solution that harmonizes them.

"We shall prove by him that his book was not written to destroy but to fulfill, that he wrote it not to persuade men to disbelieve, but to draw all men to see that they may still believe; that he himself believes, that he believes the creeds and the Scriptures; his belief is all comprehensive, every word and letter of the Scriptures and of the doctrines of his Church, but in his belief he exercises the same liberty of choice as to quality which has been exercised from time immemorial within this Church."

The first witness was Theodore Schroeder of Cos Cob, Conn., a writer and student for twenty years on psychology and psychoanalysis. In qualifying him as an expert Mr. Sharts obtained the statement from the witness that he had contributed fifty articles to magazines on psychology and 140 articles to various other periodicals, but when counsel began to examine the witness on statements made in his opening the Church advocate objected and was sustained.

"Then I can only read into the record what I intended to prove," remarked Mr. Sharts, and he read everything he hoped to have adduced from Mr. Schroeder's testimony.

The second witness for the defense was Dr. Arthur E. Whatham of Louisville, Ky., for 35 years a priest in the Episcopal Church, and Theological Adviser of Bishop Brown. Dr. Whatham said he had made a study of Church History, of Anthropology and General Science. He was asked if he had any material to show that from the earliest days of Christianity liberty of choice had been permitted to the clergy in the interpretation of the Scriptures, as to whether they might interpret them literally or symbolically.

"Yes," replied the witness, who said he had in mind a statement of Origen in A. D. 230.

"What was the statement of Origen?" asked Mr. Sharts, but Mr. Dibble objected and was sustained.

Counsel for the defense then read into the record what he had expected the witness to say, which was that Origen had asserted that the Biblican account of creation was symbolic. Mr. Sharts also read from the writings and utterances of numerous churchmen statements to support his assertion that the Biblical account of creation was symbolic. These authorities included Dean Inge of St. Paul's Cathedral, London; Professor Toy, of Harvard Divinity School; the Bishop of Tasmania, Canon Barnes, of Oxford; E. A. Wallace-Budge, of the British Museum; Professor Breasted, Bethune Baker and Dr. Francis J. Hall, of the General Theological Seminary. The witness was not cross-examined.

The same procedure was followed in the case of the third witness, Lieut. Col. Emory Scott West, U. S. A., retired, for thirty years a student of the history of pagan religions. The Court did not permit the witness to be questioned, but counsel read into the record a voluminous amount of matter prepared by Colonel West.

ONLY 1 LEFT IN SOME POSTS

MANY GOLD STAR MOTHERS

Men of '98 and the American Legion, Also Honored by City at Memorial Services.

New York members of the Grand Army of the Republic, numbering 250 men, paraded up Riverside Drive yesterday morning with an escort of 40,000.

The Civil War veterans were fewer than half of the smallest number that has appeared before in any Memorial Day parade in this city, and the thinness of their ranks was emphasized by the varied multitudes in the divisions which preceded and followed them.

The threatening weather of Thursday accounted for some of the absentees, but the year just passed has been a disastrous one for the remnant of the army which fought at Gettysburg and Appomattox. Several posts were completely wiped out by death. The Zouaves, who have made a brilliant spot of color in past parades, numbered only six men yesterday. The Noah L. Farnham Post, which had thirteen men in line last year, had only four comrades in the parade yesterday. There have been five deaths in the post in the last three months.

Many of the posts were represented by only one man. Last year, the fifty-ninth since the end of the Civil War, was one of the most disastrous in the history of the Grand Army, according to Comrade John B. Trainer, the Chairman of the Memorial Committee.

Thinned Ranks, Tattered Flags.

The evidence of the great havoc in the ranks of the veterans in the last year was a shock to the spectators, and there was an atmosphere of sadness mixed with admiration for the white-haired men who were still able to march.

More than 10,000 young National Guardsmen had marched at the head of the parade in compact formation. Behind them came the men in blue, scattered along nearly a mile of the line of march. At some of the thin spots of the parade, there were only three or four veterans to the block. Several of the posts were represented by single marchers, whose children or grandchildren were carrying the tattered war flag and the banner of the organization.

The shreds of flags that had seen service in the Civil War were all carefully tied to their staffs. It was a hard day on old flags. The sun was out and the sky was clear, but something like a gale was blowing down the Hudson right in the faces of the marchers. Some of the new flags which started out in good condition showed tears before the parade ended. Many of the post-war flags which had seen service in thirty or forty Memorial Day parades were badly used up before the parade had started and were whipped into rags before it was over.

Wind Staggers Aged Veterans.

Unusually violent gusts of wind staggered two or three of the veterans who attempted to carry their square post banners which caught the wind like a sail. It took two men to force one unruly banner through a blast near the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument.

The wind filled the spectacle with action for its whole length. The flags on houses along Riverside Drive, and the red, white and blue bunting on the reviewing stands were kept billowing. The flags carried by the paraders in the face of the wind either flapped fiercely or extended backward from the staff in stiff angles.

The Civil War veterans, who wore the blue caps with small round tops, were lucky. Those who wore the black campaign hats were in trouble. It was occasionally hard going for the Zouaves, whose voluminous red pantaloons were a severe handicap. The wind added picturesqueness by fluttering the costumes of the thousands of women marchers.

Before the G. A. R. men came, the National Guard Division, under Brig. Gen. George R. Dyer, had come in for much applause, because of the smartness of their marching. They showed the results of the intensive drilling, which had gone on in the armories of the city since the war. The searchlights and anti-aircraft guns, the enlarged field artillery units and the mounted men added to the spectacle. The field artillery glittered as the sunlight was reflected from polished brass and steel. The breech-blocks of the guns of Battery F of the 104th Field Artillery were polished into mirrors, and the harness metal was burnished till it sparkled, the result of an all night's work in the armory.

G. A. R. Follow Guardsmen.

After the guardsmen had passed on, the first of the Civil War posts came in sight. In the lead were the survivors of Phil Kearney Post 8, headed by Commander Thomas M. Valleau. They were cheered resoundingly as they turned eyes to the left and saluted the reviewing officer, Major Gen. C. W. Berry, and took a good look at Governor Alfred E. Smith, who was near him.

The Governor got and returned many private salutes from veterans of his acquaintance. Those who knew him pointed him out to those who did not, and the discipline got a little ragged, as many veterans, after passing the stand stopped, put a hand to the brow and scrutinized the head of the State. Ranks were disordered for the next few hundred yards by political gossip.

But the veterans had by no means forgotten how to be military. Wherever they were two abreast they kept in step and marched in straight lines. Some were bent and some were erect. Rheumatism and old age had affected the gait of many of them. Yet, while they were able to march at all, they were able to keep up a semblance of discipline. They wore everything from the full uniform of the Grand Army to complete outfits of citizen's clothes. The Civil War cap, with the small round top, was often the only relic of the uniform that was worn at all. One man wore a black campaign hat and a gray suit, with the brass army buttons sewed along the front and on the sleeves. The coats of some of the veterans were heavily weighted with medals, usually the eagles and stars suspended from tiny American flags.

Crowds Cheer the Veterans.

The veterans were cheered by large crowds all along the line of march and most heartily by the large crowd at the reviewing stand. Those who hobbled along with difficulty against the high wind and those who forced themselves ahead with crutches got separate cheers.

With the object of helping the 250 veterans to march as far as possible, they were mixed with posts of the Daughters of the Veterans and with their children and friends who accompanied them in large groups.

The Grand Army men marched in two divisions. In the van of the second division was Lafayette Post 140, led by Commander David R. Wilson. This is one of the posts that is still strong. A white-haired man, thin but sturdy, who marched with this post, has the distinction of being a veteran not only of the Civil, but of the Crimean War. This is Dr. Charles Lloyd of 2,015 University Avenue. He served under the British flag in the Crimea in 1854 and 1855. He came to this country during the Civil War, met Abraham Lincoln at the White House, and enlisted and served throughout the war as a navy surgeon.

One of the independent marchers among the G. A. R. veterans was Comrade Frank Kelly, a drummer boy in the war, who came from Philadelphia as a guest of the paraders and carried in the parade an enlargement of a photograph of the dead on the field of Gettysburg which he had taken with a camera. Kelly and his picture were in great demand, because several of the paraders were at Gettysburg and were eager to refresh their recollections by a look at the picture.

One of the proudest of the paraders was a solitary colored veteran. He marched alone in the rear of the Excelsior Military Band, an organization of negro musicians, headed by a firum-major wearing a cream-colored shako and a blue and silver uniform, frogged and knotted with silver cord, and carrying a silver baton ending in a silver globe the size of the average library globe map of the world. There was a special cheer for this well-escorted veteran, and another cheer later on for the white-haired negro soldiers of the Thaddeus Stevens Post, who wore their Civil War uniforms and rode in Civil War hacks.

Many Old Veterans in Autos.

Each division of G. A. R. men ended with scores of limousines filled with old soldiers who did not trust their legs to carry them the full mile distance of the line of march. After passing General Berry, many veterans went back to the reviewing stand to join Henry J. Kopper, Grand Marshal of the parade, to see the rest of the parade.

After the Grand Army came the Spanish War Veterans in blue flannel shirts and khaki trousers. It was a round quarter of a century since their service ended and they turned out in large numbers in commemoration of the anniversary. A few of them, middle-aged men when they served in that war, are now well along in years. They marched with good discipline and were heartily cheered all along the line.

There was a special ovation for the fattest man in the parade, who marched at the head of one of the sections of the Spanish War Veterans. At close range it appeared that his great chest and girth were absolutely necessary for the mounting of row upon row of medals for heroism, sharpshooter's honors, campaign stripes and decorations and distinctions of every quality and kind.

Wounded veterans of the late war came next in a fleet of Luna Park busese. They were cheered again and again all along the line.

Moving along on skittish mounts, the mounted British, French, Italian and Belgian veterans became badly disorganized as they tried to pass the reviewing stand in a neat line. Their horses shied at the gigantic bearskin shakoes of the reviewing officers' guard of honor and were not reassured by the noise of Highland bagpipers some distance behind them. They were a badly scrambled group of Allies as they reached the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument.

The Fourth Division was composed chiefly of the members of the American Legion of New York County, who marched in grass-green uniforms under freshly camouflaged helmets. In this division marched nearly 2,000 policemen in police uniform, all veterans of the World War. Some of their blue coats were nothing but parks for medals.

Gold Star Mothers in Line.

Under the leadership of Miss Thais Magrane, the Gold Star mothers, wives and sisters formed the third section of this division.

The Fifth Division was composed of Veterans of Foreign Wars in varied uniforms with campaign stripes representing wars, expeditions and landing parties of marines and regulars in all parts of the world. They were veterans of the Boxer affair, of the Philippines, Haiti and a hundred and one little scraps along the Central American coast.

Some of the other organizations in the remaining divisions of the parade were detachments of French and British war veterans, Fascisti in black shirts, Red Cross nurses, Boy and Girl Scouts, the Military Order of the World War, the Rainbow Division, Veterans' Association, the Veterans of Belleau Wood, the Army and Navy Union, the American Guard Division and the Gardes Lafayette of the Franco-Prussian War. Life and spirit were given to the whole parade by the Police Band and the many other bands thickly scattered through it.

Much attention was attracted by the Joan of Arc in the Tenth Division. This was a young woman of great beauty, wearing the red peasant costume of France in the time of Joan, with hair falling down her back and floating behind her. She carried a wooden cross with the image of the Saviour. The part of Joan was taken by Mrs. Frank Ross. At her side, also in peasant costume, was Mrs. R. D'Armour, representing the mother of Joan. She and the other women in this section were members of Le Lyceum. They carried many beautiful flags and a banner made in France in exact imitation of the one carried by Joan in her campaigns against the English. This was a banner of watered silk with lilies painted on one side and the figure of Christ on the Cross painted on the other. After the parade they proceeded with the Sisters of Joan of Arc and other organizations to the statue of Joan of Arc, where speeches were made by Gaston Liebert, Mme. Carlo Polifeme, President of the Lyceum, and others.

Brooklyn and Bronx Parades.

Mayor Hylan and United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, Jr., were among those in the reviewing stand at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Arch in Brooklyn. The survivors of the Civil War in the Brooklyn parade were fewer in number than those in any past parade in good weather in Brooklyn. Robert Forfar was Grand Marshal, and Thomas E. Holt the Adjutant General. There was an escort of 8,000 in the Bronx for the few survivors of the Civil War who were able to take part in the parade of which James J. Marshall was the Grand Marshal. There was a great cheer for Thomas P. Tulte, a 76-year-old veteran, who rode a prancing horse and led the scant dozen Civil War veterans.

Memorial Day services were held by the Greater New York Federation of Churches on the campus at University Heights. A plea for the prevention of future wars was made by Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown, who said:

"We would not go into war for glory; but we would accept war rather than suffer national dishonor and national disaster. Nevertheless, there are many of us who are not satisfied that our country is doing all that it can do and all that it ought to do for the prevention of wars to come. We stand for national defense in time of need. We stand for a reasonable measure of preparedness. But our duty as a nation is not done unless every provision for possible war is matched with an equally honest and effective provision for the prevention of war. At the present time our thoughts are for peace; our appropriations are for war. [illegible]

Poppy Sale Ends; $100,000 Raised for Veterans' Camp

The sale of poppies by organizations of war veterans closed yesterday. The receipts had not been turned in last night and in some instances will not all be in for two weeks. Officials of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars said the drive had been a success.

The money collected by the American Legion is to be devoted to the Veterans' Mountain Camp, conducted by that organization at Tupper Lake, N. Y.

"Now that our drive is over," said Dr. Samuel A. Lloyd, President of the camp, "I want to thank the people for their generosity and to thank our workers for their efforts."

It is believed that more than 1,250,000 poppies were sold and that the receipts will reach at least $100,000. Last year the Legion realized $98,000 from the sale of poppies.

Veteran, 85, Leads Manila Parade.

MANILA, May 30 (Associated Press).—Ebenezer Cook, 85 years old, the only member of the Grand Army of the Republic in the Philippine Islands, led Manila's Memorial Day parade today to a cemetery where Americans and Filipinos joined in decorating the graves of veterans of several wars. General Emilio Aguinaldo, head of the Filipino revolutionary movement of 1896-1901, delivered an address on behalf of the native veterans of that struggle, and Governor General Wood, [illegible]

HOUSE HEARS EULOGY OF CIVIL WAR SONGS

Oldest Member Contrasts 'John Brown's Body' With 'Yes, We Have No Bananas.'

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Contrasting the sentiments expressed in the songs sung by soldiers in the Civil War with the "jazz" music now so popular, Representative Isaac R. Sherwood, Democrat, of Ohio, the oldest member of the House and probably the oldest general officer now living of the armies that were in the field from 1861 to 1865, delivered a Memorial Day speech by request today just before the House resumed discussion of the Agricultural Relief bill.

Mr. Sherwood, who is 88 years of age, stated his belief that the Rebellion was the only war in history in which the men behind the guns on both sides sang songs of their own composition. These songs, he said, more than 150 in number, were sung on the march, around the bivouac fires at night and on the battlefields, and were composed by men who were unknown as poets.

"None of the great ante-bellum poets of the North or of the South wrote any of them," he continued.

"In all the sixty years that have elapsed since the war there has not been one great dramatic poem written, one lyric equal to the soldiers' songs sung during that war, not one of high moral import. We are living in an utilitarian age, and the spirit that actuated that great war appears to have gone.

"What have we now? 'Yes, We Have No Bananas,' 'Take Us to the Land of Jazz,' 'Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here,' songs of the vulgar type."

He spoke of "John Brown's body lies a-mouldering in the grave," as one of the great songs of the Civil War period. "How many of this distinguished body of statesmen know who wrote that song?" he asked. "That was written by Colonel Fletcher Webster of the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, in camp at Boston Harbor in 1861. It was sung by the famous Hutcheson family of New Hampshire in the camps of the Army of the Potomac."

The greatest dramatic poem of the South, the speaker said, was "The Conquered Banner," the requiem of the Confederacy, written by Father Ryan, chaplain of a Mobile, Ala., regiment, who was captured in the charge on Fort Sanders in East Tennessee.

"The first song written on the Confederate side was the work of James R. Randall, a tutor in a Louisiana college—'Maryland, My Maryland,' one of the greatest dramatic poems of the war," the speaker added.

"The most dramatic and most pathetic and most plaintive of all the war songs, sung on both sides, was 'Tenting Tonight on the Old Camp Ground.' That song was written by Arthur Kittridge of the Second New Hampshire Infantry. He was returning to the old camp along the marshes of the Chickahominy River of Virginia.

"It was a chill November night and raining. The commissary had not come up, and young Kittridge, a private soldier-musician, was lonesome. He had a letter from his girl that night; and of all the homesickness in the world the worst is the homesickness of a soldier who yearns to get back home to see his girl. He sat around the bivouac fire and on a piece of brown paper wrote that immortal song.

"'Somebody's Darling' was another sung all over the North and all over the South. It was written by Mariah Lacosta of Virginia. Another old favorite was 'The Vacant Chair,' written by George F. Root of Chicago. The boy had volunteered and left his family. He was their only boy. He was at the front. The family gathered around the table at night for family prayers. There was one vacant chair."

This circumstance, Mr. Sherwood said, gave rise to the words:

We shall meet but we shall miss him,
There will be one vacant chair.
We shall linger to caress him,
While we breathe our evening prayer.

"Let us hope," said Mr. Sherwood in conclusion, "that in a near-by day some great, prescient genius will arise and sing the songs of that great epoch, linking Gettysburg with Chickamauga and Nashville with Franklin in one grand epic poem."

A burst of applause sounded as he took his seat.

Mr. Sherwood, who was born in Stanford, Dutchess County, N. Y., on Aug. 13, 1835, enlisted as a private in the Fourteenth Ohio Infantry in April, 1861. He was mustered out as a Brigadier General in October, 1865. He has served in Congress for eighteen years, although his terms have not been successive. He was educated at Hudson River Institute, Claverack, N. Y., at Antioch College, Ohio, and at the Poughkeepsie Law College. He was on the State bench in Ohio for many years and served one term as Secretary of State for Ohio.

PERSHING APPEALS FOR PREPAREDNESS

Unless We Heed the Lessons of the Past, Memorial Day Exercises Are a Sham, He Says.

SPEAKS AT CAMP MERRITT

Letter From Coolidge Read at Dedication of Soldiers' Monument, Attended by 10,000.

Before an audience of more than 10,000 persons at the dedication of the Soldiers' Monument at Camp Merritt, Cresskill, N. J., yesterday, General Pershing made a plea for national preparedness for possible future war as the only means of avoiding a staggering loss of life and treasure. Unless we heed the bitter lessons of the past, General Pershing said, Memorial Day exercises are a sham and our mourning for those who died in the service of their country is insincere.

General Pershing's trip from Manhattan through Bergen County to Camp Merritt was almost a continuous ovation. Escorted by six motorcycle policemen, he crossed on the Fort Lee ferry in a closed automobile. He was recognized and cheered by the throngs of holiday seekers who were leaving the city. At Fort Lee, Englewood and Tenafly there were other demonstrations.

As the General's motor car approached the granite monument in the little stone-flagged plaza at Camp Merritt, Troop B of the 102d Cavalry, New Jersey National Guard, of Newark, swung into line and formed an escort to the platform near the monument. Instantly the crowds closed in and cheered the General.

"Our monuments are erected to commemorate the acts of unselfish men and the struggles by which our institutions have been made secure and in memory of those who gave their lives in the service of their country," said General Pershing. "General Wesley Merritt, for whom Camp Merritt was named, was Superintendent during my four years at the Military Academy. His high character left an indelible impression on all who had the good fortune and honor to serve under him. He rendered distinguished service in the Civil War and was commander of the American expedition which captured Manila from the Spaniards.

Camp Merritt's Part in War.

"Camp Merritt was not a training camp, but was the main gateway to the battlefields of France. Many a day there sailed from here a larger army than the one which followed Washington across New Jersey. They were worthy sons of historic ancestors. The aims of Washington's armies, and of ours the present day, were the same. Washington's men fought on this side of the Atlantic for liberty; our armies of the present day fought on the other side to maintain it. The men of both armies put aside their peaceful occupations for the same historic cause. All were willing to pay the price of liberty and submitted to the same discipline.

"Here, under the stress of emergency, many had to learn for the first time the most elementary lessons of obedience. In a few days, or a few hours, they faced trying concentration of administrative detail and classification under the most trying circumstances. But Camp Merritt was only one example of the result of inadequate preparation during peace to meet the exigencies of war, a fact all too forcibly borne in upon the minds of our troops as time went on.

"I have often wondered at the feelings of the young untried officers and men as they wrote their last letters to their families, and of them who, regardless of their losses, carried their banners to victory; all shame to them who, by their failure to prepare for what came, caused such sacrifices during the first year of the war.

"We have now upon our statute books which, if reasonably observed, will prevent such needless waste of life in the future. Under it can be formed a framework of trained officers to face future emergencies. Shall we profit by the lessons of past wars, or shall we continue to indulge in false hopes and illusions and drift back into the same state of inertia which proved so costly in precious lives and staggering indebtedness? If we do not heed these lessons, then our meeting here today is a sham and our mourning for the dead is insincere. Rather, then, let us realize the price of liberty and resolve that all our youth in the future shall receive training to protect our beloved land if necessary, and thus aid in the fulfillment of our country's destiny."

Governor George S. Silzer of New Jersey, the next speaker, said the monument marked a spot "made sacred by those who paused and dedicated themselves to American ideals."

Reads Letter from Coolidge.

The White House,
Washington, March 7, 1923.

My Dear Mr. Roberts:

The gratification with which I have received the invitation of the Camp Merritt Memorial Association to attend on May 30 the dedication of the Camp Merritt Memorial is equaled only by my regret at having to say that it will not be possible for me to accept. An engagement, long since made, that requires me to participate in the ceremonies at Arlington on that day, renders it impossible for me to come to Camp Merritt.

I want you to know of my great interest in the work of the Camp Merritt Memorial Association, which I would like to attest in a more convincing fashion if it were possible. With Camp Merritt will always be associated in the minds of a great army of patriotic Americans who passed through it during the war years, remembrances of that great epoch in their lives. In setting up an appropriate memorial as one of the altars of American patriotism the association is adding to the service which its members gave to their country during the war.

Most sincerely yours,
CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Other speakers at the exercises were John A. W. Donaldson, Director of the Board of Freeholders of Bergen County, and William M. Johnson, Chairman of the Dedication Committee. Mrs. Welsey Merritt unveiled the monument, which is a granite shaft 65 feet high. Upon it are inscribed the names of the fifteen officers, 558 men, four nurses and one civilian who died at Camp Merritt during the war. On the eastern side is this inscription:

"In memory of those who gave their lives for their country while on duty in Camp Merritt. This monument marks the centre of the camp and faces the highway over which more than a million American soldiers passed on their way to and from the World War, 1917-19. Erected by the State of New Jersey, County of Bergen, Bergen County Historical Society, officers and men of Camp Merritt, many patriotic citizens and the Camp Merritt Memorial Association."

300 Troops at Exercises

Those on the speakers' platform included Major Gen. Hugh L. Scott, retired, former Chief of Staff; Major Gen. James G. Harbord, former Chief of Staff of the A. E. F.; Major Gen. David W. Shanks and Major Gen. George P. Duncan, both former commanders of Camp Merritt, and Brig. Gen. B. F. Cleveland, a relative of former President Cleveland.

About 300 troops participated in the exercises. They included the 137th Coast Artillery, from Fort Hancock, N. J.; Company G, 113th Infantry, New Jersey National Guard, from Hackensack; Company F, from Hackensack; Battery A, 112th Field Artillery, from Battery A, 112th Field Artillery, from [illegible] wood, and a detachment and color guard from the 107th Infantry—the old Seventh—New York City.

More than 1,000 school children from thirty towns, Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, passed in review before General Pershing. The flag ceremony was performed by the Sons of the Revolution of New York State, the 107th Infantry, and Veterans of Bergen County.

General Pershing was entertained at luncheon by the Memorial Association at the Knickerbocker Club, Tenafly.

Scarcely a trace of the wartime buildings at Camp Merritt now remains. During the war 578,000 officers and men were sent from there to France.

Unveil Memorial at Passaic.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 30.—General Pershing was greeted by large throngs when he arrived here escorted by officials, in automobiles, after speaking at Camp Merritt.

More than 50,000 soldiers, veterans and members of fraternal, civic organizations paraded to military park and assembled about the $30,000 war memorial, which was unveiled in the presence of General Pershing, Governor Silzer and U. S. Senator Edge, each of whom spoke briefly, repeating their remarks at camp Merritt.

Decorate Graves in Belgium.

CHILDREN IN FRANCE KEEP MEMORIAL DAY

PARIS, May 30 (Associated Press).—The spectacle of 800 French war orphans bearing American flags marching past the United States military cemetery at Suresnes to the tune of the old revolutionary anthem "Les Girondins," the chorus of which is "To die for one's country, this is the most beautiful fate, the most worthy of envy," was a touching part of the Paris celebration of the American Memorial Day today.

The youngsters were reviewed by no less a person than General Mangin, and as the band struck up the stirring old revolutionary anthem they marched erectly with shining faces with a demeanor even more military than that of the French infantry regiment, cavalry detachment and marines platoon which were detailed to honor the American dead lying in the lofty cemetery perched up on a hilltop from which the Arc de Triomphe and the Eiffel Tower loom up hazily and almost insignificantly in the distance.

Despite sultriness of the weather, the ceremony was attended by a large crowd of Americans and French people. C. A. Irwin of Denver, whose son is buried at Suresnes, made a moving address, after which a chorus of eighty young girls from the normal school of the Seine Department sang the "Apotheosis" by Berlioz. Father Hennick of Pittsburgh recited the invocation.

Sheldon Whitehouse, Counselor of the American Embassy, representing Ambassador Herrick, briefly recalled that "the spirits that went forth at Château Thierry and the Argonne are one with those of Gettysburg and Santiago." General Mangin in a brief soldierly speech recalled the rôle of the American expeditionary forces, mentioning that six American divisions were ready to attack under his orders in the Lorraine on Nov. 14, 1918, an attack which, he said, "the premature armistice unfortunately stopped."

The Rev. Frederick W. Beekman, Dean of the American Pro-Cathedral, concluded the ceremonies with prayers, after which taps were sounded and the cemetery's flag was lowered.

The olive-drab uniforms of American veterans grouped about the Arc de Triomphe at noon today brought back to onlookers the jubilee year after the armistice when American troops played so prominent a part in the celebration of the American national Memorial Day in France. After today's services in the American Episcopal Pro-Cathedral and the American Protestant and Catholic Churches the members of the American colony, including many reserve officers spending their holidays here, gathered at France's national shrine in order that the Unknown Soldier should not seem to be forgotten by his comrades-in-arms honoring their own dead.

Two platoons of French infantry and two of the Republican Guard lined the approach to the tomb as the American Legion's color guard advanced and took up a position before the memorial. Then Sheldon Whitehouse, Counsellor of the American Embassy, representing Ambassador Herrick, accompanied by the military and naval attachés laid a wreath from the embassy at the feet of the sleeping "poilu," while the guard of honor presented arms. Afterward wreaths from the American Legion, the American Women's Club, Golden Gate Post of the Legion, from California, and other organizations were deposited on the shrine.

Captain Réné l'Hopital, aid to Marshal Foch, presented a wreath on behalf of the Marshal, and a bevy of Generals represented the French Government and the army, which lent the famous band of the Republican Guard for the Procathedral service, at which the national anthems and the Dead March from "Saul" were rendered.

PACIFISTS ASSAILED BY BISHOP MANNING

Would Have Army and Navy Strong Enough to Do Our Part in Maintaining World Peace.

ASKS DRY LAW BE OBEYED

Tribute Paid to Nation's Fighters in Memorial Address to the 77th Division.

Although asserting he was not a prohibitionist, Bishop William T. Manning made an earnest plea for obedience to the Eighteenth Amendment in an address yesterday to members of the Seventy-seventh Division on the lawn outside the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Bishop Manning advocated an army and navy of sufficient strength to enable the United States to do its part in maintaining peace in the world, and said: "Do not be misled by the sophistries of a false and foolish pacifism."

By a coincidence, the Bishop's comments upon pacifism were punctuated by the booming of a cannon on a warship in the Hudson River near by.

"Let us stand, all of us for order, for self-discipline and self-control and for loyal obedience to the law of our land," Bishop Manning said. "Free institutions can only succeed on the basis of obedience to law. We hear a great deal said just now about the question of enforcement of law. I think we need to hear more about obedience to the law. We need to remember that a man against whom the Government has to enforce the law is not a good citizen. Men or women who disobey the law are lending their aid to anarchy and disorder.

"I say this in special reference to the prohibition laws, which probably some of you do not like. And I say it more freely because I was never myself a prohibitionist. But the question for us now is not what you or I think about prohibition. The question is an infinitely higher and more sacred one than that. It is a question of what we think about obeying the law of the land. I make this statement to you, my brothers of the Seventy-seventh Division, and I make it without fear of successful contradiction by any one.

Must Not Evade the Law.

"If we disapprove the law we have the right to say so and to do anything we can and wish to in lawful ways to bring about its repeal. But no citizen has the right to disobey or evade the law or by his words or acts to encourage others to do so, and none of us can do these things without doing harm to our country.

"As President Coolidge has said, 'It is the duty of every citizen to stand for observance of the law and to let it be known that he is opposed to its violation.' Let us stand like men, for self-discipline, for order and for loyal obedience to the law of our land."

Bishop Manning said that this Memorial Day "speaks to us of the patriotism, the devotion, the loyalty to country and to God shown by the men of our nation in every great crisis which we have been called upon to meet."

After speaking of the part the Seventy-seventh played in the war, especially in the Argonne Forest, Bishop Manning recalled that he had spent several months with the division at Camp Upton before the men sailed for France. He is now chaplain of the Seventy-seventh Division, Organized Reserves.

"We think today of our friends and brothers who did not return from the front," he said. "Let us ever remember those who gave their lives in the great cause. And let us equally remember the suffering and disabled who need and have a right to our care, our sympathy and our most generous provision for them. Let us give no countenance to the shallow and destructive teachings of those who seek to weaken and undermine the spirit of patriotism in our land. Only the man who is true to his primary obligations, to his own home and to his own land, is to be trusted in the larger field of world citizenship.

Assails the Pacifists.

"There is a type of man who declares that under no circumstances will he ever take part in another war. There are those who are trying to persuade our young men to sign a pledge never under any circumstances to bear arms for their country or to take any part in war. Such a position is unsound both morally and mentally. So long as wrong and evil exist in this world we must be prepared to use force if need be to uphold right and justice and to protect the weak from wrong and outrage.

"We Americans abhor war and love peace. We believe in disarmament to the full extent to which this can safely be carried. But so long as crime and brutality exist we know that police are needed. We honor and respect our army and navy, and we propose to maintain them at such reasonable strength as shall enable us to do our part in upholding law and right and peace in the world."

Led by Major John B. Marsh, the veterans marched to the Cathedral from Riverside Drive, where they participated in the Memorial Day parade. Before Bishop Manning delivered his address the boys' choir of the Cathedral sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The Bishop led in prayer and the exercises closed with the singing of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

HONOR OUR DEAD IN LONDON

Americans Attend Memorial Service at St. Margaret's Church.

LONDON, May 30.—A well attended service in memory of the officers and men of the United States Army and Navy who fell in the war and lie buried in the British Isles was held at noon today at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster.

Ambassador Kellogg and Consul General Skinner attended officially, as well as the staffs of the embassy and consulate. Officers in American uniforms acted as ushers, and the congregation consisted in the main of American visitors and residents.

The service was conducted by Canon Carnegie, rector of the church and chaplain of the House of Commons, and opened with the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." After a lesson from the last chapter of Revelations the choir sang, unaccompanied, Sullivan's anthem, "Yes, though I walk and care not."

Canon Carnegie gave a brief address on the importance of a good understanding between the two countries. Silence was kept for a few moments in memory of the departed, and then followed the prayers of commemoration. The choir then sang, unaccompanied and kneeling, Gounod's "I Heard a Voice From Heaven," and the service came to a close with the hymn, "O Valiant Sacrifice."

Canon Carnegie and the Ambassador then led the procession from St. Margaret's to Westminster Abbey, where the Ambassador laid on the grave of the Unknown Warrior a magnificent wreath as a tribute from the Americans in London.

REICH NATIONALISTS DROP CABINET FIGHT

CLING TO OLD DEMANDS

By T. R. YBARRA.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 30.—The Nationalists tonight officially announced they would cease trying to form a new Government in cooperation with the three middle parties. They sought to impose as conditions of their cooperation the elimination of Foreign Minister Stresemann, the placing of the Nationalist Party in control of the new Government and "a change of German foreign policy to one compatible with German honor," which means a slap at acceptance of the Dawes report. The middle parties refused to accept these conditions.

President Ebert then commissioned Chancellor Marx to continue trying to form a new Government without Nationalist cooperation.

At meetings today the Nationalists persistently demanded not only the Chancellorship but the portfolios of Foreign Affairs and Interior, which would be equivalent to placing them in control of the new Government. But the middle parties showed strenuous objection to granting these demands.

Especially firm in opposition to the arrogant Nationalists were the Centrum and Democrats. The German People's Party, the third member of the coalition which formed the late German Government, showed more friendliness toward the Nationalists, seeking to harmonize the ambitious demands of the latter with the Centrist and Democratic reluctance to grant them.

This friendliness of the German People's Party for the Nationalists was shown despite a strong desire among the Nationalists to eliminate Foreign Minister Stresemann, the most prominent member of the German People's Party.

Nationalist Sincerity Questioned.

BERLIN, May 30 (Associated Press).—The German Nationalists tonight broke down under the pressure of the rigorous "third degree" methods applied to them by Chancellor Marx during the past forty-eight hours, virtually confessing in an official party communiqué that they had been simulating sincerity with respect to their avowed intention to enter a non-Socialistic Coalition Government on the basis of the program drafted by the three middle parties.

In withdrawing from the present interparty deliberations the reactionaries reiterate their adherence to a Chancellorship under Admiral von Tirpitz; they make their familiar reservations with respect to their position on the Dawes report and declared further that participation by them in a Cabinet in which they are not given either the post of Chancellor or Foreign Minister would be intolerable. The Nationalists also admit that rejection by the other parties of their pet scheme of linking up Prussian politics with the impending reorganization of the Central Government contributed to their decision to abandon the present parleys.

On the question of the present Government's acceptance of the Dawes report, the Nationalist communique declares that ultimate decision on the question of its acceptance or rejection can be reached only after a preliminary accord on all moot points. As this attitude conflicts with the position already assumed by the Marx-Stresemann Government, the reactionaries believe themselves unable to support the Government's previous commitment.

In political circles what is termed the retreat of the Nationalists under fire caused only mild surprise. In Reichstag circles it is declared the incongruity of the course pursued by the Middle Parties was fully appreciated long before Chancelor Marx sallied forth in a vain attempt to reform the reactionaries.

The Middle Parties undertook no further action tonight, as Chancellor Marx is still in possession of President Ebert's commission to form a new government. It is believed, however, that the Chancellor now will seek to revamp the Middle Parties bloc and go before the Reichstag with a platform which will vouchsafe the support of the Socialists on the question of making the Dawes report the pivotal point in the Government's program. The three Middle Parties, together with the Socialists and the Bavarian People's Party, command sufficient mandates to insure them a working majority.

INVOLVES LUDENDORFF IN PLOT TO KILL SEECKT

Witness Also Says Reventlow Urged Him Not to 'Squeal' on Patriots.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 30.—Though General von Seeckt did not testify today in the trial of the men implicated in the plot to assassinate him, his testimony being postponed until tomorrow, today's proceedings did not lack sensational features.

One of the principal witnesses for the prosecution, Lieutenant von Tettenborn, testified that General Ludendorff was mentioned by one defendant, Thormann, as being involved in the plot and that Count Zu Reventlow, the noted Nationalist leader, had tried hard to persuade him (Tettenborn) not to "squeal" on the Pan-German chieftain, Clars, who is also implicated.

It was also brought out that General Reinhardt, well known for his republican tendencies, was next to von Seeckt on the conspirators' black list.

Von Tettenborn, who says he entered the plot solely to expose the defendants, Thorman and Grandel, testified that Thormann and Grandel, testified that quarters of the Völkisch party and told him he had just had a conference in Munjoh with Ludendorff, at which it was agreed that von Seeckt was a great danger to Germany.

"I have orders for you to aid us in killing von Seeckt," von Tettenborn testified Thormann told him.

It seems that the Pan-German League, together with other "patriotic" organizations, had planned something similar to the Munich brewery revolution to take place after Jan. 15, in connection with which Thormann visited von Tettenborn Jan. 12, and told him that Koepke, another man implicated, must kill von Seeckt before the 16th.

After the plans for the assassination had been laid, however, von Tettenborn testified, he warned von Seeckt. The witness said that much pressure had been brought to bear on him to shield Clars and Grandel, the latter a co-defendant with Thormann. Among those seeking to persuade him, he said, was Count Zu Reventlow.

Koepke, said to have been hired by Thormann to kill von Seeckt, corroborated von Tettenborn's testimony fully.

FLIERS PLAN TO LEAVE JAPANESE BASE TODAY

Planes Are Now Ready for Resuming World Flight—Japanese Aviator Is Killed.

KASUMIGAURA, Japan, May 30 (Associated Press).—The American round-the-world fliers still hope to get away tomorrow on the next leg of their flight, though possibly they will not be able to do so until Sunday. They hope to make two jumps the day they leave here, going to Kushimoto to refuel and thence on to Kagoshima, their last stop in Japan before darkness.

The Americans today witnessed the fatal fall of one of the Japanese aviators stationed at this naval aviation base. The flier, piloting a Japanese naval plane, was up some distance when the plane's fuel tank exploded and the machine crashed on the shores of the lagoon.

The American planes have undergone four days of extensive overhauling. New engines and new "pontoons" have been put in place, and they are nearly ready for the jump-off. The flagplane, flown by Lieutenant Lowell H. Smith, acting commander, was pronounced fit today, and Lieutenant Smith made a test flight. On this he had as a passenger the commander of the Kasumigaura base.

Thirteen American destroyers, which will be stationed between here and Shanghai to aid the fliers in case of need, are taking their places along the Japanese coast line and in a chain across the China Sea.

KAGOSHIMA, May 30.—This city, ordinarily sleeping in the shadow of the great volcano, Sakurajima, is feverishly excited in preparation for welcoming the American airmen, possibly tomorrow. The reception will be held on the beach, where the Mayor will deliver an address of welcome in English, in which he will say:

"Here, at your last stopping place, Japan greets you and bids you godspeed. This is the birthday of world flights, whereof you are pioneers. Great benefits followed the exploits of Columbus and Magellan and they also will follow in your wake. If there is anything Kagoshima can give you, please ask."

The Mayor's daughter will present to Lieutenant Smith, acting commander, a great pewter key to the city, pewter being the leading production of the district, while every flier will receive a gift of pewter ware. The key is engraved with a picture of the volcano and the inscription: "To the American Aviators, Conquerors of the Pacific, May, 1924," in Japanese and English.

BANKERS CRITICIZED AT ATLANTIC CITY

THRIFT INSTRUCTION URGED

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 30.—Bankers of New Jersey are purely selfish in urging that paid up building and loan shares are not a proper feature of building and loan associations, it was charged here today by H. R. Heydon of Newark, Secretary of the New Jersey League of Building and Loan Associations, which opened its sixteenth annual meeting in Haddon Hall. The convention will close tomorrow.

The League is a unit for the paid up share feature and will oppose any effort by bankers to affect its discontinuance, Mr. Heydon said. Under the paid up share plan, he explained, a certain amount of money is paid down and the proportion of profits which would otherwise accrue is waived for a certain fixed rate of interest.

"The bankers," declared Mr. Heydon, "feel that this practice invades their territory. However, it is absolutely in accordance with the law. It is our right and we propose to adhere to it."

The teaching of the building and loan idea in all the schools of the States was urged by Elmere K. Sexton, Assistant Superintendent of Schools at Newark. Mr. Sexton is President of the Thrift Building and Loan Association there.

"One in every seven and a half adults in New Jersey," said Mr. Sexton, "belongs to the Building and Loan and it is, therefore, a subject which students should understand not only from the viewpoint of mathematics but for the inculcation of thrift."

Mr. Sexton asked the League to take up the matter with school superintendents.

The gathering was opened this morning by T. Yorke Smith of Camden, President. Judge John Warren of Jersey City, is Vice President.

The Board of Governors will be elected tomorrow morning. The newly elected Board will choose the officers of the coming year immediately after adjournment of the convention tomorrow.

HOWARD LEADS LYNCH.

Typographical Head Has Majority on Half of Ballots Cast.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 30.—Charles P. Howard, President of the International Typographical Union, was leading in his contest for re-election by 13,522 votes to 10,205 for James M. Lynch of Syracuse, N. Y., according to unofficial returns announced at the headquarters of the union here today. It was stated that the vote represented approximately half of the membership of the union and included forty locals, some being among the largest in the organization.

The larger unions included in the unofficial tabulation, it was said, are New York, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Kansas City, Washington, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Omaha, Pittsburgh, Syracuse, Detroit and Cleveland.

It was stated at the headquarters that the official vote of the International officers would not be announced until after the International Canvassing Board meets June 7 and reviews and tabulates the ballots.

Included among the cities which have reported were most of those which are said to be strongholds of Howard's backers. Supporters of Lynch are expecting a big vote in the smaller Western cities and declared their candidate will be elected by a majority of 4,000 or 5,000 votes.

FREIGHTER RADIOS S O S

The Brento in Distress—Furness-Withy Liner Goes to Her Aid.

Naval Communications picked up an S O S at 8 o'clock last night, sent out by the Italian freighter Brento, and immediately notified the broadcasting stations in the metropolitan district to shut down. A few minutes later the steamer Maraval of the Furness-Withy West Indian Line was heard calling the disabled steamer and stating that she was going to the assistance of the Brento.

The position of the vessel in distress was not given and nothing further was picked up by Naval Communications. The order to resume radio traffic was given at 8:28 P. M.

The Brento is a single screw freighter of 2,391 gross tons, 289 feet 6 inches long, and was built in England in 1891. She left Genoa on May 11 for Pensacola, Fla. The Maraval was bound from Georgetown and Trinidad for New York with passengers, mails and merchandise.

EVEREST EXPEDITION MEETS FIRST CHECK

By Lieut. Col. E. F. NORTON,

tory when a commander blessed his reserve.

This day Odell and Hazard attempted to reconnoitre a route to the North Col, but conditions were such as precluded their reaching more than half way and making a dump of roped pickets.

Another Start for Camp No. 3.

Next day Mallory, Geoffrey Bruce and I left for No 3 with a convoy, very much more cheerful than the first party, and a reserve carrying stores, partly to the dump and partly through to No. 3 camp. Hazard, who was sent to the base to relieve Mr. Shebbeare, met us en route. I have a sharp silhouette of him in mind as I write, making famous going down the glassy surface of the glacier in the teeth of the gale, with his beard and mustache iced so that he looked like Father Christmas. Shebbeare's special qualifications as transport officer now called for his presence at No. 2 camp, where it was hoped under more favorable conditions to dispense with an officer.

Now began a blizzard lashing continuously for forty-eight hours. Strictly speaking, it only snowed for perhaps twenty-four hours, but conditions subsequently were identical, or worse. The wind increased after the snow ceased to fall, driving the fresh fallen powdery snow before it in incessant gusts and producing much the same results as if the snow were falling, combined with lower temperature.

We arrived at No. 3 camp on the morning of the 10th to find the tents filled with inches of powdery snow. It was now apparent that it was inadvisable to maintain more Sahibs than were necessary under such conditions at No. 3 camp. The carrying of provisions and consideration of the condition of those climbers, inclined to an early attempt, outweighed the acclimatization question and decided Mallory and Irvine to return to Camp No. 2, which they did after breakfast.

Somervell and I escorted the party from No. 3 camp back to the dump and returned well laden in the teeth of the driving snow, while Geoffrey Bruce stimulated the reluctant camp into activity and did what could be done under intolerable conditions to evolve order out of chaos and comfort out of misery.

Night of Misery in Tents.

The night of the 10th and 11th served the purpose, perhaps, of testing the wind resistance of our apparently flimsy high-altitude tents. For all other purposes it is best forgotten. The wind appeared to shoot high in the air over the North Col, Rapiu and Lhakpala, the three passes surrounding us, and from some point high in the zenith descended on the camp like a terrier on a rat-pit and shook our little tents like rats. The minimum temperature was minus, and the tents were again filled with drifted snow.

At 9 A. M. on the 11th the temperature was still minus 1, a gale was raging and everything was deep in snow. The North Col route would in no circumstances be safe for some days. The much-enduring second party of porters was now reduced nearly to the condition which the first party had reached three days before. There was nothing for it but to retreat—retreat to the base camp for a few days' recuperation before making a fresh start.

Messengers were dispatched to No. 2 camp with instructions to evacuate it in hopes they would reach there in time to stop any upward convoy.

Then Geoffrey Bruce did a fine bit of work, though it was very much in the ordinary day's work for him. Taking up a commanding position in the centre of the camp in the teeth of the gale, he proceeded to order the striking and packing of the camp, for it was impossible to risk standing or even collapsed tents in such weather. How he got the men to work, the tents struck and packed in bags and the boxes of bedding, stores and fuel all neatly dumped only he can tell. Perhaps his stinging words cut more than the wind; but it is on record that he found time and opportunity to give exactly the right amount of sympathy to the real sick and to those who thought they were more sick than they were. Such loads as were to accompany our downward course were fairly and justly apportioned, and, to his credit be it said, a comparatively cheerful party thankfully turned their backs on what had an hour ago been Camp No. 3 and which was now something resembling a neat pile of stones.

Half way down that weird corridor, with blue ice pinnacles resembling nothing so much as a transformation scene at Drury Lane, which forms the lower road from Camp 2 to Camp 3, we met the convoy from Camp 3, our note having arrived too late to stop it. Never mind! They can go right through to the base.

Next day our convoy goes through to Camp 1, with Mallory, Noel, Irvine and Beetham in charge, and Somervell and Odell as far as Camp 2. Geoffry Bruce and I spent the night at Camp 2 to look after and escort on the morrow a man who had broken a small bone in his leg on the glacier.

Whole Expedition Back at Base.

So by 2 P. M. on the 12th the whole expedition was again at the base—and what a different base from that which we thought so bleak a fortnight ago! Bleak it still is, with no sign of the stir of the Tibetan Spring in the scant vegetation and grey moraine heaps, but a garden of roses after No. 3.

The end of Round 1 finds us discomfited, but very far from defeated. A hitch, but by no means the crash we feared, had come. We have one man seriously frostbitten, one with a broken leg and two severe cases of bronchitis; and, worst of all, Lancenaik Shamsherpun of the Sixth Gurkhas is suffering apparently from hemorrhage of the brain and is in a serious condition. We lose inevitably five or six days of the original program.

Hoping to Get Lama's Blessing.

On the other hand, when we re-occupy Camp No. 3 in three or four days we will have no look over our shoulders; everything will be up, and the proportion of stores to go up higher will be a fleabite compared with what has been done. Porters and sahibs are acclimatized and tested up to 21,000 feet; we know our good carriers. Already, twenty-four hours after arrival at the base camp, the porters have got over most of their minor ailments and fatigues and are showing normal, cheerful faces. We hope to get them and the expedition as a whole blessed two days hence by the head lama at Rongbuk Monastery, who was too sick to do this when we passed through Rongbuk.

The British members of the expedition are in perfect health, despite their roughish experience. Give us but the weather encountered in 1922, and nothing will prevent the smooth continuance of the plan, with ample time to carry it out.

The brightest spot in our arrival at the base was to find that Major Hingston had rejoined, after his leaving General Bruce at Darjeeling, in the nick of time to relieve Somerville of some of the arduous duties of medical officer.

First Death in the Party.

Since writing the above I have to record with the greatest regret the death of Shamsherpun, painlessly and without recovering consciousness. The death of this splendid young man in the prime of youth is much felt by all the members of the expedition, who in tendering their sympathies with his relatives and regiment feel they have lost a friend and a most loyal assistant.

BRIAND PARTY JOINS WAR ON MILLERAND

Republican Socialists Agree to Accept No Government Appointed by Executive.

PRESIDENT PLANS A FIGHT

May Refuse to Retire Except on Direct Vote of Both the Senate and Chamber of Deputies.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 30.—Neither M. Briand nor M. Painlevé made any protest when their Republican Socialist followers at a group meeting today decided to make common cause with the Unified Socialists on the question of refusing support to any Ministry named by President Millerand. This decision of the Republican Socialists and the attitude of their chiefs has roused much comment, for M. Briand had been reported during the last few days to be the real organizer of the move against the President.

The Radical Socialists have not yet taken a decision, but the majority of the party, it was stated in the Chamber lobbies today, was thought certain when it meets Sunday to side with the Unified Socialists and Republican Socialists.

Louis Loucheur and some of his friends in the Chamber have started organizing a new parliamentary group called the Radical Left group, which will take a position alongside the Radicals and Socialists on most questions, but probably not on the Presidential issue.

Though M. Painlevé still is slated as the official candidate of the Left for Presidency of the Chamber, it is stated tonight that a change may be made by the conference of all the Left parties on Sunday morning before the Chamber opens.

Who will head the new Government, or what it will be, no one can tell tonight. A week ago it was taken for granted that M. Herriot would be the Premier. Now it is considered that he hasn't more than a 50 per cent. chance. The action of the Unified Socialists of the Seine Department last night in voting to abstain from approving any Premier named by President Millerand makes it practically certain the national conference of the party which meets on Sunday with its 105 Deputies, will be instructed to that effect. Without the Socialists Herriot has no majority. If he accepts their position he probably cannot become Premier so long as Millerand remains at the Elysée. There are a hundred different rumors current as to what will happen, but nobody can tell.

M. Herriot was asked the flat question this afternoon whether he would accept power from the hands of M. Millerand. He refused to answer, but did throw some light on the situation by saying that unless he was able to form a Government with the support to the Socialists he would make no effort to construct a centre bloc.

President Millerand seems not to have made up his mind what to do. He is in a delicate position for while it is true that if Herriot refuses power at his hands he can name a Premier of the Right, it remains true that the Bloc des Gauches has a majority in the Chamber. The situation reminds one much of a dog trying to catch its tail.

It will probably be easier to get an idea of the situation on Monday morning. In the first place the Chamber meets on Sunday when there should be an indication of party lines, that is, an indication how well the newly elected deputies remain in the parties which elected them. In the second place the Chamber is to designate its President and under the rules President Millerand must confer with him before making a choice. In the third place there is a Socialist Congress and in the fourth place the Radical Socialist Deputies hold a meeting on Sunday night.

Those close to President Millerand say in the event M. Herriot does not form a Government he will send a message to the Chamber, which will call for a vote on whether or not he should resign. If, as predicted, he gets a vote of approval, the situation would still remain unsolved if the bloc des Gauches holds together. However, some observers think if he is sure he could not form a Government, Herriot, who never said he wanted Millerand to resign, would consent to join his radical Socialists to the Centre bloc from which might result a Government headed by Louis Loucheur or Louis Barthou. There are even some who think, if he makes up his mind to fight it out, President Millerand will name M. Poincaré again and leave the Chamber to find a solution. Considering this eventuality, which may seem on its face far-fetched, it must not be forgotten that on the popular vote M. Poincaré didn't lose as many ballots as the changes in the Chamber would indicate. The average Frenchman wants peace abroad and wants peace at home, and any such carryings on as a protracted crisis in the Chamber, with its possible financial results, or a prolonged general strike because a faction, which has 5 per cent. of the majority of the Chamber, is angry at Millerand, might well provoke popular resentment, which will be quickly enough felt at the Palais Bourbon.

Jules Sauerwein, political correspondent of the aMtin, who is in close touch with the Elysée writes tonight that even if on Sunday or Monday the Socialists and Radicals agree not to take office or support any one taking office under Millerand, the latter will immediately after the election of a President of the Chamber summon Herriot to take up the Premiership. If he refuses, the President will repeat the invitation to two or three other leaders who might be expected to have a majority of the Left behind them.

"He will remain strictly within the Constitution," says Sauerwein, "and Article VI. of the Constitution declares that the President elected for seven years is responsible only to the two Chambers and only in case of high treason. To oblige him to resign from his high function for any other reason is a violation of the Constitution.

"If matters reach that point," Sauerwein continues, "I believe an opportunity will be given the Parliament to take full responsibility. A Government will be formed, perhaps even presided over, by a man of foremost rank, who will bring before the Senate and Chamber simultaneously a message from the President of the republic on which the two assemblies will be invited to deliberate and vote. It will not be possible to overthrow the Cabinet on any other issue, for its first act will be to demand this discussion."

In such circumstances the vote of the Senate will almost certainly be favorable to the Elysée, while in the Chamber the division may very possibly be also favorable. The President's attitude M. Sauerwein sums up in this way:

"M. Millerand will not resign on a quibble, nor on an accidental vote of one or the other Chamber, nor above all, on the injunction of a party congress."

Between now and Monday the Socialists, and more especially the Radicals, thus fully informed of the President's intentions, will have full opportunity to consider and perhaps modify their position.

In the event of President Millerand leaving the Elysée, it is generally predicted that President Doumergue of the Senate would be elected President. However, anything is possible in Franch politics, especially Presidential elections. There is, for example, the instance of the election of Paul Deschanel in place of Clemenceau. Perhaps this time Poincaré might go back to the Elysée. That would put him safely out of the way.

Decrees Save 440,000,000 Francs.

PARIS, May 30 (Associated Press).—The last full Cabinet council of the Poincaré Government with President Millerand presiding took place this morning at the palace of the Elysée. The council today decided to publish the decrees for the economies determined upon thus far, representing a yearly saving of 440,000,000 francs by retrenchment in the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Finance, Public Works, Aeronautics, Merchant Marine and Commerce. These economies have been accomplished without necessitating a single administrative reform.

"This is our parting gift to the country," remarked Minister of War Maginot somewhat bitterly after the meeting.

The full carrying out of the fiscal measures, passed with such tremendous difficulties in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate earlier in the year, would have resulted in economies totaling 1,000,000,000 francs yearly, but Premier Poincaré explained to the council that in order to save the additional 560,000,000 it would have been necessary to issue decrees for reforms in administration, and that the Government had refrained from promulgating "decree laws" owing to "its imminent resignation."

It was in order to obtain authority to issue such decree laws that Premier Poincaré waged his three months' fight before the Chamber and Senate, staking the question of confidence and the life of his Government no less than ninety times.

The last act of the present Cabinet in full council was upon M. Maginot's recommendation to appoint General Weygand a member of the Superior War Council for 1924.

FRANCE ACCLAIMS ROCKEFELLER'S GIFT

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 30.—Great gratification is expressed this morning by the French press at the $1,000,000 gift of John D. Rockefeller Jr., for the reconstruction of the roof of Rheims Cathedral and the rehabilitation of the palaces and gardens of Versailles and Fontainebleau.

The condition of these masterpieces of French art has been a source of great regret to the French people. Some reconstruction work has been done on the cathedral since the war, but the failure of Germany to pay reparations and the necessity of suspending French reconstruction loans have brought the repairs to a halt, and because of the need of spending French money elsewhere, Versailles and Fontainebleau have been permitted to fall into a grievous state of disrepair. At both palaces statues are stained, broken and decayed, and in many places weeds are flourishing.

The "hamlet" of Marie Antoinette at Versailles is perhaps the most dilapidated show place of France. The cottages lack window-panes; doors are boarded up, the brooks are dry and filled with rotted vegetation and the grass is waist-high. The Temple of Love has the appearance of an ancient ruin. The famous fountains, which now play only twice a month for a quarter of an hour, show deplorable neglect, and several of the smaller fountains are in a state of ruin.

Versailles is not only a work of art, but the public buildings are used on great State occasions. The States-General meets there, and the palace has more than once been the scene of such important events as the signing of the Treaty of Versailles. Because of the double importance of this building the French Parliament recently voted 1,000,000 francs per year for a period of five years to bring it into a state of repair. At the time the money was voted, however, it was admitted that this sum would not be nearly sufficient to carry out the necessary improvements; but this appropriation plus the Rockefeller gift will bring both Versailles and Fontainebleau back to their pre-war state as well as pay for a new roof for Rheims Cathedral.

"Versailles Is Saved!"

PARIS, May 30. (Associated Press).—"Versailles is saved!" exclaimed Henry Lapauze, curator of the Petit Palais of Paris, speaking of the Rockefeller gift to an interviewer for the Intransigeant today. "There will certainly be enough to restore Versailles and carry out urgent repairs at Fontainebleau," he added, "if the work at Rheims is limited to replacing the roof."

The Ministry of Fine Arts will dispense the money under the general approval of the France-America Committee. Paul Léon, Director of the Ministry, thinks that the largest part will be needed in the restoration of the palace of Versailles, although one of the first objects will be the proper roofing of the noble edifice at Rheims.

Time and the weather have damaged the palace in a thousand ways. Some of the frescoed ceilings have been marred by leaking roofs; woodwork has decayed for lack of proper oiling and painting; frost has forced bricks out of place and caused stonework to crumble. This damaging process has continued, although the Ministry of Fine Arts has done its best to prevent it with the small resources placed at its disposal for the purpose.

Mr. Rockefeller, before he wrote to Premier Poincaré concerning his purpose, caused inquiry to be made of several eminent Frenchmen as to whether they thought a gift of the kind he intended would be welcome, or whether France would prefer to take care of her historic monuments alone. The reply in every case was that such a gift would be received with gratitude and appreciation for the interest felt outside of France in the structures dear to her, which, owing to the tragedy of the war and the slenderness of her resources, could not immediately be placed in a proper state of preservation.

GIVE BERLIN 30 DAYS TO REPLY ON ARMS

three or four months which will determine whether or not Germany is telling the truth about being disarmed, and it is on the result of this inquiry that the Allies must base future action.

Germany at Fault in Delay.

The note observes:

"If now, more than four years after the treaty has been in effect, Germany must accept investigation by Interallied Commission the responsibility for this situation is hers, for without the systematic obstruction of which the Allies so often have complained disarmament operations would have been finished long ago."

The note concludes by saying that either Germany accepts investigation demanded by the Allies or she persists in refusing it. If she accepts it the Allies intend an impartial investigation, every result of which will be made public. If Germany refuses, full allied control will be maintained and enforced by the authority of all the allied Governments, the commuhication adds.

"In any event the present situation which is the source of constant difficulty cannot be allowed to continue and the allied Governments depend on the German Government to understand it is for the general interest for it to take an immediate favorable decision. They therefore expect the German Government will notify them as soon as possible, and in any case before June 30, that it accepts the proposition made in the present note concerning general inspection and the consequent limitation of control to five classes."

The disarmament issue may have a very important bearing on the Dawes reparation plan. The Germans have just elected a President of the Reichstag who is a member of the party pledged to defy the Treaty of Versailles. There is no point on which the Nationalists are more touchy than disarmament. The fact that the disarmament note is approved not only by Italy and Belgium, but by England as well, means the new French Premier cannot if he would throw it in the waste basket.

JAPANESE FEELING AGAINST US GROWS

Jingo Press, Shinto Priests and Reservists Are Active in Fomenting It.

WOULD BAR OUR IMPORTS

Government Deprecates the "National Spirit Meetings" and Other Outbursts.

TOKIO, May 30 (Associated Press).—Anti-American feeling engendered by enactment of the United States immigration law with its Japanese exclusion provision threatens to become more widespread and intense, backed as it is by the Jingo Press and a small group of nationalistic publicists, politicians, former service men and retired officers of the army and navy.

Official Japan, represented by the Kiyoura Government, absolutely opposes any retaliatory measures, and although Viscount Kato remains silent upon that point, it is generally believed in high quarters that the new ministry he is expected to form within the fortnight will continue the same policy.

With this contradiction of public and some private opinion in evidence, Japanese officials express regret that they are unable to control the anti-American expressions which are outcropping almost daily in public meetings, editorials, and newspaper advertisements. Propaganda is clearly under way to persuade the public to refuse to buy American goods and demand instead Japanese or European substitutes.

In this connection, the vernacular press insists there is a movement under way to prohibit importation of all luxuries. Officials admit such a measure has been and is being considered, merely as a means of equalizing exports and imports. The margin of imports over exports has reached 500,000 yen since the first of the year, and has been giving officials some worry.

It is stated officially, that discussion of the proposed bar to luxuries has not yet reached a tangible stage, and is still far from being adopted as a policy. Furthermore, it is added, that even if adopted the ban of luxuries will not be discriminatory, or connected even distantly with the American exclusion issue. The adoption will be due solely to the necessities of the domestic economic situation.

Some papers, however, still insist that the move to restrict imports is a direct result of the American immigration policy.

A group of Nationalistic publicists, headed by Shinkichi Uyesugi, Professor of Political Science at the imperial Tokio University, is promoting a series of what they call "national spirit meetings," with the avowed purpose of arousing Japanese spirit against the exclusion measure.

One of these meetings has been called for June 6, in the great wrestling hall here, one of the largest meeting places in the city. The date was selected, Uyesugi explained today, because it is that upon which Ambassador Woods will leave. The Nationalists, he explained, do not wish to embarrass the Ambassador, "whose sympathy for the Japanese makes it quite impossible for the Japanese to take resolute measures while he still is here."

Uyesugi and his followers are planning ten similar meetings for other cities of the empire during June.

Reservists of the army also are reported to be active in the anti-exclusion campaign. According to the vernacular newspapers, the Kyoto Reservists' Association has voted to use to fight exclusion the funds it had raised for celebration next month of the wedding of the Prince Regent.

Shinto Priests Protest.

Delegates to the national convention of Shinto priests, heads of the ancient religion of Japan, now meeting here, assembled today at the Meiji shrine, dedicated to the father of the present Emperor, and passed a resolution protesting against passage of the Japanese exclusion provision of the Immigration bill by the American Congress.

"The exclusion law," says the resolution, "aimed at the Japanese, has been passed by Congress and signed by the President. This convinces the Japanese people of the falsity of the American ideals of justice and humanity. We, the leaders of Shinto, charged with the responsibility for the national morals, declare our purpose to do all possible to protect the national courage."

The Yorobu Choho, a jingo newspaper, editorially today urges a Japanese boycott of American culture. It suggests that a movement be launched throughout Japan to exclude, not necessarily individual Americans, but American civilization and American products.

"We've been aping the American civilization and buying American goods, believing that's the way to progress," says the paper.

"We awaken now, however, to the fact that Japan can advance only by turning from American ways."

This morning even the conservative business organ, Chugai Shogyo Shimpo, speaking editorially, supports the "rising national movement" against the American immigration bill.

"Nothing is more futile or more fatal than for the Government to attempt to suppress this movement, as long as it is confined within reasonable limits," the newspaper declares.

"The Japanese people realize that it is useless to rely on the Government to solve this problem properly. Now is the time for the nation to show how it values its national prestige and how ready it is to sacrifice anything necessary to protect it."

The Myako Shimbun, nationalist paper, questions the sincerity of efforts to patch up the controversy.

"Talk of Japanese-American friendship is sheer hypocrisy," it declares. "We must face the facts, and quiet these false pretenses. We thought we could rely upon American justice and fair play, but we have been fooled."

Tokio Sounded on Schurman.

There is reason to believe that the Japanese Foreign Office has been asked by the American Government whether Jacob Gould Schurman, now Minister to China, would be acceptable as Ambassador to Japan to succeed Cyrus E. Woods.

The Ambassador and Mrs. Woods were guests today at a luncheon given in their honor by Baron Hisaya Iwasaki, head of the great Mitsui interests. The occasion was an elaborate one. The guests included many of the most notable figures in Japan.

Schurman Under Consideration.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Official confirmation of the report that Minister Schurman at Peking had been selected to succeed Ambassador Woods at Tokio was lacking today, and Secretary Hughes today refused to comment in any way. There was little disposition in diplomatic circles, however, to doubt that Minister Schurman's name was under consideration at Tokio or that it would be acceptable to the Japanese Government.

Administration officials have manifested repeatedly the desire to take every possible means of impressing on the Japanese Government and people the friendly sentiments of the American Government, and it is believed the prompt filling of the Tokio post would aid this purpose.

Dr. Schurman has long been known as a student of Far Eastern affairs, and viewed sympathetically the problems of the nations there. He spent considerable time in Japan in 1920, making a number of public addresses, and was well received.

The experience of Dr. Schurman at Peking has given him first hand knowledge of the problems of the Far East which would be of utmost value to him. In view of all these circumstances, and particularly because he is already virtually on the scene, the word from Tokio today caused little surprise despite official reticence in Washington.

CONVENTION SEATS FOR DONORS OF $100

Organization for Allotment and Distribution of Tickets Is Completed.

LOTTERY PLAN IS ADOPTED

Many Precautions Taken Against Forgery and Counterfeiting—Gala Week at Coney.

A few more tickets of admission to the Democratic National Convention are still available, Stanley J. Quinn, Vice Chairman of the New York National Convention Committee, announced yesterday. As the committee will be able to use a limited amount of additional funds in defraying the expenses of the convention and entertaining the delegates, these few remaining tickets will be allotted to the first contributors on the basis of one reserved seat ticket for all sessions of the convention for each $100 contributed.

Mr. Quinn and John R. Young, Secretary of the committee, have completed an organization for the allotment and distribution of these tickets. The actual distribution will begin in the convention headquarters of the committee on Sunday, June 22, two days before the beginning of the convention, but certificates calling for the tickets will be issued next week from the committee's present headquarters in the Woolworth Building to contributors and the Chairmen of the fifty-four subcommittees appointed to entertain the delegates from each of the States and Territories. Each Chairman of a subcommittee will receive two seats, so that he and his committee members may keep in touch with the delegates even on the convention floor.

Headquarters in Hotel Astor.

Fred A. Muschenheim, proprietor of the Hotel Astor, has donated to Joseph P. Day, chairman of the committee, the free use of the entire western part of the mezzanine floor of the hotel from Friday, June 20, to the end of the convention. Convention tickets will be distributed from headquarters on this floor, from which also will be distributed the tickets to the various entertainments and other functions being arranged by the General Entertainment, Committee, of which Thomas L. Chadbourne is Chairman, and the Women's Committee of Nine, of which Miss Elizabeth Marbury is Chairman. A telephone switchboard with fifteen trunk lines will be installed in the headquarters of the general committee and service will be maintained twenty-four hours a day.

To make certain that there will be no favoritism in the allotment of seats to contributors, they will be allotted by lottery. The tickets will be divided into pairs and singles. A person who has contributed $500 to the fund will be entitled to two pairs of seats and a single seat. The seats to be distributed will be numbered. Each contributor will receive a number. The drawing will be managed by a committee of newspaper editors who have been active in the work of preparing for the convention.

Precautions Against Counterfeiting.

Some day next week Mr. Quinn and Mr. Young will mail to each contributor an order for the seats to which he will be entitled. These orders will be protected against forgery, substitution or alteration by various safety devices employed by banks and the Stock Exchange in protecting securities. The delay in the distribution of the actual tickets until June 22 is a precaution against counterfeiting.

Arrangements for a gala week at Coney Island will be made by the Coney Island Business Men's Association. The program will begin on Monday evening, June 23, with a parade of local Democratic organizations, including Tammany.

A rolling chair parade of the entrants in the national beauty contest will be held Tuesday afternoon and there will be a display of fireworks that night. A fashion revue will be held Wednesday afternoon and a fraternal parade Wednesday night. On Thursday afternoon there will be a bathing suit parade of the beauty prize contestants and a parade of veterans of the various wars of the United States that night. On Friday evening there will be a torchlight parade in a revival of the political marching clubs of the "Eighties" and "Nineties."

Mrs. Roosevelt to Entertain.

Democratic men and women from New York State attending the convention will be entertained at a buffet supper by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Daniel O'Day at 7 o'clock Tuesday evening, June 24, after the opening session of the convention. Supper will be served at the town house of Mrs. Roosevelt, 49 East Sixty-fifth Street, and the adjoining home of Mrs. James Roosevelt.

Although no individual invitations are being issued, Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. O'Day expect to entertain about 400. The supper party later will attend the reception to be given by Miss Elisabeth Marbury and the Committee of Nine at the Hotel Commodore. Mrs. Roosevelt is Vice Chairman of the Democratic State Committee and Mrs. O'Day is Associate Chairman of the Women's Division.

M'ADOO CREDITS TAX LAW TO DEMOCRATS

He Congratulates Garner and Congressmen for Defeating Mellon Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—A telegram was received here today from William G. McAdoo congratulating Representative Garner of Texas and other Democrats on the part they played in the framing and passing of the tax reduction law. The telegram read:

"You and your colleagues have strikingly demonstrated in the new revenue bill the value of Democratic leadership during this leaderless period of American history. The Democrats and Progressives in the Senate and House have rendered inestimable service to the country in forcing the enactment of a tax law which confers the principal benefits of tax reduction upon the great body of taxpayers instead of discriminating unjustly in favor of the privileged class, as proposed by the Mellon plan.

"It is a fortunate thing for the country that the people have effective champions in the legislative branch of the Government, in spite of a reactionary Administration. Throughout the length and breadth of the land the people have understood the situation at Washington and realize that only through the return of Democratic leadership can control of the Government be restored and administered again in the interest of all the people.

"The tax bill sharply defined the contest between privilege and reaction on the one hand and true democracy and progress on the other. Democracy triumphed over privilege, as it will triumph even more effectively over privilege in November, 1924."

HALF HOUR SUBWAY BLOCK.

Seventh Avenue Express Held Up by Mechanical Trouble.

Four hundred passengers in a northbound Seventh Avenue express train were blocked in the subway south of Times Square station for half an hour last night. The train had stopped opposite Fortieth Street at 9:10 o'clock, and when the motorman attempted to start it something went wrong with the forward truck of the first car.

As the motorman applied the power there was a bumping noise beneath which shook the whole car, and men and women in it ran to the rear of the train. The motorman and crew got off to inspect the brake mechanism and after fifteen minutes the conductor announced that he feared the train would have to stay where it was until the arrival of a repair crew.

Many of the men passengers made their way to the front door and, jumping to the track, walked to the stairway at the south end of the Times Square station. The train crew refused to permit women to make the trip.

Eventually the motorman succeeded in working the train by easy stages to the station, where the passengers disembarked.

Wholesale Dry Goods Sales Drop.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 30.—Marshall Field & Co. in their weekly review of the wholesale dry goods trade say: "Current wholesale distribution of dry goods did not reach the volume of last week nor of last year for the corresponding week. Road sales were approximaately the same as a week ago, although they were somewhat less than the same period last year. There were more customers in the market than in 1923 during the corresponding period. Collections were very good, showing a considerable improvement over the same week a year ago."

Mississippians Uninstructed.

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., May 30.—The State Democratic Convention elected today an uninstructed delegation to the national convention, headed by the two United States Senators and the Governor. Resolutions endorsing the selection of Senator Harrison as Temporary Chairman of the convention in New York were adopted. The delegation was instructed to vote as a unit.

NEW ENGLAND SOLID FOR SMITH, HE SAYS

Massachusetts Delegate Thinks Governor, if Named, Could Win State From Coolidge.

MONTANA BOUND TO McADOO

Democratic Leader There Disputes Claim That One Wet Delegate Is for Smith.

Confirmation of the claim of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Chairman of the Smith committee, that Governor Smith would have virtually solid support from the Massachusetts delegation to the Democratic National Convention was obtained yesterday from James A. Donovan, a lawyer, of Lawrence, Mass., one of the delegates, who called at the Smith headquarters in the Prudence Building. Mr. Donovan, who voted for the nomination of Governor Smith at San Francisco four years ago, said:

"I have never seen such enthusiasm for a candidate for a Presidential nomination as there is for Governor Smith in Massachusetts. The Massachusetts delegation will have thirty-six votes in the convention divided among seventy-two delegates, each with a one-half vote. Senator David I. Walsh, who has declared for Governor Smith, undoubtedly will be leader of the delegation.

"Practically the whole delegation will vote for Governor Smith on the first ballot and will continue to vote for him until he is nominated. There are a few votes in the delegation which may be scattered to other candidates on the first few ballots, but I believe that all the Massachusetts votes will be cast for 'Al' Smith before the fifth balot is taken."

Mr. Donovan added that he believed Governor Smith, if nominated, could carry the State against President Coolidge.

"He has no enemies in Massachusetts and would have the support of a united Democracy," he said.

Thomas Arthur, former Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of Montana, who is at the Waldorf-Astoria, said the result of the primary in Montana bound the delegation of eight "irrevocably" to the candidacy of William G. McAdoo and disputed the claim that part of the delegation would be for Governor Smith.

"There was no contest over the question of instructions in Montana," Mr. Arthur said. "McAdoo's was the only name filed. We challenged the friends of other candidates, including Governor Smith of New York, to file their names and offered to bear the attendant expenses. We wanted a test of strength between McAdoo and the other candidates.

"Eight delegates were elected at the primary. Seven carried the McAdoo slogan under their names on the ballot. W. H. Maloney, the eighth, who tailed the ticket, carried as his slogan opposition to the Volstead act. He is the delegate whom the Smith managers claim, but he is instructed for McAdoo and will vote for his nomination."

Mr. Arthur said Senator Walsh wrote a letter during the Montana campaign, which was published, predicting that McAdoo would have more than 600 votes on the first ballot at the convention.

Governor Smith passed a quiet day and had no comment to make on politics. After reviewing the Memorial Day parade in the forenoon he visited his mother's grave in Calvary Cemetery in the afternoon. It is expected that he will confer today with Norman E. Mack of Buffalo, Democratic National Committeeman, and other prominent supporters.

THINKS SMITH WOULD WIN.

Illinois Republican Says Wet Democrat Would Carry West.

According to Sheriff Harman of Brooklyn, who returned yesterday on the United States liner George Washington from a five weeks' trip to Europe, Governor "Al" Smith's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for President forms one of the popular topics of conversation among Americans in Paris and London. Most of them seemed to believe the Governor would be nominated and sweep the country in the November election.

L. L. Emerson, Republican, for the last eight years Secretary of State for Illinois, also returned on the George Washington and declared that Governor Smith on a wet platform undoubtedly would carry not only Illinois but the West in general.

WARNS REPUBLICANS DRY PLANK IS FATAL

Party Publication Here Says Wet Democrat Could Count on 269 Electoral Votes.

A. B. SAMUELS LISTS STATES

Asserts Smith Could Carry New York, New Jersey and Illinois if G. O. P. Favored Enforcement.

A warning to the Republican Party that it will be defeated in the national election this Fall unless it embodies a plank in its platform for the liberalization of the Volstead act, is sounded by A. Bertram Samuels in the current issue of The Republican, a publication devoted to the affairs of the New York County party organization.

The writer, after a survey of the States, concludes that the Democrats, with a liberalization plank against a Republican "dry" platform, could be certain of at least 269 Electoral votes—possibly 281. Two hundred and sixty-six votes constitutes the majority necessary for election.

While not the official organ of the Republican County Committee, The Republican has upon its Advisory Board some of the leading Republicans in the organization, including Nicholas Murray Butler, who recently attacked prohibition as a failure and urged adoption by the Republican convention of a modification plank. Others on the board are Miss Helen Varick Baswell, Martin C. Ansorge, Margaret M. Burnet, John Kirkland Clark, Robert S. Conklin, Mrs. Elizabeth Cudmore, Mrs. John H. Iselin and Charles E. Heyo.

Mr. Samuels starts out by discrediting the prediction that the solidarity of the South might be broken in the event that Governor Smith or some other "wet" be nominated by the Democrats. He insists that Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia, although dry, would remain Democratic without regard to the prohibition issue. They control 114 Electoral votes.

"Not even a Roosevelt, nor even the League of Nations issue could bring them into the Republican column," he says. "I see nothing this year that should cause them to alter their votes."

Other Southern States Discussed.

The article then takes up Southern States which occasionally have voted Republican. Kentucky, Tennessee, Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma, with 41 electoral votes, come within this category.

Kentucky voted for Republican electors once—in the first Bryan year, when McKinley carried the State by a plurality of 281. Since then it has been consistently Democratic in Presidential elections. Tennessee, New Mexico and Oklahoma were carried by Harding. New Mexico and Oklahoma returned to the Democratic column in 1922. Mr. Samuels ascribes the 1920 lapses to the League of Nations issue. He infers that these States would not turn Republican again on an issue like prohibition and concludes that the 155 electoral votes of States in these two groups are assured to the Democratic candidate, even though he be a "wet."

The writer places Missouri and Maryland in a group by themselves. Missouri went Republican in 1904, 1908 and again in 1920. But in 1922 Missouri gave Senator Reed, an avowed "wet," opposed by the Anti-Saloon League, a majority of 44,000. In 1918 Missouri, with some 200,000 of its younger male voters overseas with the American Expeditionary Force, rejected a prohibition amendment to its Constitution by a majority of approximately 75,000.

Puts Maryland in Wet Column.

Maryland, Republican in the Presidential elections of 1896 and 1900, cast its electoral vote for Harding four years ago. But in 1922 it elected a Democratic United States Senator and last year reelected Governor Ritchie, a pronounced "wet," by a plurality of 40,000. More recently—in February, this year—Maryland confirmed its "wetness" when it rejected, by a vote of 72 to 39, in its General Assembly, a State Prohibition Enforcement bill.

These two States cast twenty-six electoral votes. From this record Mr. Samuels infers that the Republicans could not hope to carry either with a "dry" plank in the national platform.

The States in the foregoing groups are all regarded as fundamentally Democratic. They control 181 electoral votes.

The fourth group surveyed by Mr. Samuels includes States that normally are Republican in Presidential elections—New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Massachusetts. They have 106 electoral votes. Governor Smith's election by an overwhelming majority two years ago and the election of George Silzer as Governor and former Governor Edwards as United States Senator in New Jersey are regarded as out-and-out wet victories. Illinois, by a bigger majority than it gave Harding in 1920, voted for light wines and beer on a referendum submitted in 1922. While he expresses no fear of Massachusetts "going to the bad" in the coming election, Mr. Samuels points out that two years ago a prohibition enforcement bill submitted to the voters was lost by an adverse majority of 104,000.

Gives 235 to Dry Republicans.

Mr. Samuels expresses the conviction that a "wet" Democrat could carry these normally Republican States in November, Massachusetts excepted, and points out that with these additional 88 electoral votes, he would have 269, or 3 more than necessary to carry the Electoral College. He adds that Connecticut and Rhode Island with twelve electoral votes never ratified the Eighteenth Amendment. He sees a possibility for them to go Democratic. That would mean 281 electoral votes.

The remaining 235 electoral votes Mr. Samuels gives to the Republicans regardless of what their platform may contain in the way of a prohibition announcement.

"If, however, the Republicans," Mr. Samuels says in summing up, "decide upon a rationalization of the Volstead act and so state in their platform the results will be entirely different. It will surely swing into the Republican column New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Michigan and some other States which we need not now consider. With these six States, together with the 235 electoral votes which my tabulation gives our party, our victory is assured.

"But if our platform remains silent, the nation must assume—because of Coolidge's two messages in December, 1923—that we are unalterably committed to enforcement and not to modification. The nomination of any wet or liberal Democrat will take out of the Republican column New York, Illinois, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Maryland and Missouri."

OPERATE NEW FERRYBOATS.

Three Municipal Electric Craft Carry Autoists to Staten Island.

The three new municipal electric ferryboats, Rodman Wanamaker, W. R. Hearst and George W. Loft, were put into operation between the Battery and St. George, Staten Island, yesterday to accommodate the large crowds enroute by automobile to New Jersey. It is estimated more than 3,500 automobiles crossed on the new boats, which are equipped with three decks. Each has room for about 250 passengers.

Hundreds of persons went to Midland Beach and South Beach, Staten Island, to participate in the formal opening of the bathing season. The salt water swimming pool was opened for the first time yesterday at Midland Beach. About seventy-five hardy persons braved the chill air to go in swimming. There were no bathers in the surf.

After Lee Surrendered to General Grant

the soldiers of Grant at Richmond began, without orders, to salute him with cannon, but he directed the firing to cease, that it might not unnecessarily wound the feelings of the prisoners, who, he said, were still "our countrymen"! Bless his memory!

Dear, good and great old General Grant!

How many of us every day, for want of thought, hurt each other unnecessarily?

Those who live under the same roof at home and at work can spoil each other's days by the little sharp thorns of speech and manner common even to beautiful rose bushes.

Warm-weather customers require the utmost alacrity and courtesies, for they are often hurried and worried for trains and impatient to meet engagements.

These are not simply oversize suits—they were especially built for stout young chaps. The price at which they are quoted is unusual for the quality—rarely are such values to be had at less than $23.50.

Tweeds, all wool, of course—in gray or tan. Tailoring is of unusually fine character, particular attention being paid to those details so often neglected. As, for instance, the extra heavy bartacking at the pockets, button holes and other places where added strength is needed.

LAW LORDS UPSET RUSSELL DIVORCE

DECLARE CHILD LEGITIMATE

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 30.—By a decision in the House of Lords Tribunal today, declaring the infant son of the Hon. Mrs. John Hugo Russell to be legitimate, the divorce decree obtained by her husband last year is automatically rescinded.

This famous case, which is reported to have cost the litigants £35,000 to date, was terminated by a vote of three Judges against two, in favor of Mrs. Russell's appeal.

While it is possible for Mr. Russell, who is the son and heir of Lord Ampthill, to sue again for divorce, there can never again be any question of the legitimacy of the Russell baby on the grounds given in the divorce case, and he will be entitled to succeed to the Ampthill Barony and take his seat in the House of Lords.

The case was first tried in July, 1922; lasted nine days and ended in a disagreement by the jury. The second trial, in March, 1923, resulted in a decree against Mrs. Russell after an eleven days' hearing. The Court of Appeals upheld the decree in the following July, and when Mrs. Russell appealed to the Lords in March this year five days were consumed in argument.

The main point in the case was Mr. Russell's evidence that it was impossible that he should be the father of the child born to Mrs. Russell. The Lords today considered merely whether the plaintiff in the divorce case had a legal right to give such testimony.

Lord Birkenhead was quite clear that evidence of this kind was not admissable from such a source. It would not be permitted in a legitimacy suit brought by the child himself, and the House of Lords, if it sanctioned its use in divorce proceedings, might find itself pronouncing the same individual illegitimate in 1924 and legitimate in 1925.

Lord Finlay agreed with Lord Birkenhead, pointing out that the sanctity of married life in this matter must be observed, and that neither husband nor wife could be permitted to testify as to the possibility of their being parents of a child. Such evidence was not accepted in peerage legitimacy cases and in actions for ejectment from lands. It would reduce the law to an extraordinary state if it were allowed in divorce suits, he said.

Lord Dunedin also concurred, thus giving Mrs. Russell a majority of the court, but Lord Sumner disagreed. He thought the sanctity of married life had come to the limits of lost causes when divorce courts were instituted. He held that to rule out a certain class of evidence when given by one person, when it could be received from others, was to detract from the decorum of the courts. Lord Carson also dissented from the majority opinion, declaring he could find no rule of law which made a husband's evidence inadmissable. The costs of the court were given against Mr. Russell at all points in which Mrs. Russell had been successful.

LINER WASHINGTON LOSES SCREW BLADE

Arrives After a Voyage in Damp, Cold Weather—Small Fire Caused Excitement.

The George Washington of the United States Lines arrived yesterday from Bremen, Southampton and Cherbourg. The vessel was several hours late, due to fog in the Channel and the loss of a propeller blade Tuesday morning. With the exception of one day, the weather was cold and wet, with strong head winds.

The only excitement on the voyage was caused by a fire at 4 o'clock yesterday morning in a first class cabin on the top deck. It was ignited by a short circuit. The cabin was occupied by Dr. Otto Boehm, director of the Deulig Film Company of Berlin. Dr. Boehm, who weighs over two hundred pounds, shot through the window to the deck like a motion picture acrobat. The blaze was quickly extinguished with little damage. Dr. Boehm said he had come to arrange for an exchange of films with the American picture producers. Cinemas were doing a good business in Germany, he added.

Adolf Kulow, Police Commissioner of Bremerhaven, also arrived on the George Washington to spend a few weeks with his two daughters, Miss Helma and Miss Gertrude Kulow. He said that conditions in Germany financially were a little better since the introduction of the gold dollar, but that industrially they were not good. Germans in the Ruhr would not work, he said, while the French were there. Shipping had improved at Bremerhaven, the Police Commissioner said, but big vessels could not go up to Bremen because the river was too low. Crime had decreased in Germany during the past twelve months.

HYLAN DENIES USING SPIES.

"Absolute Falsehood," He Says of Deputy Controller's Charges.

Mayor Hylan yesterday denied the charges of Deputy Controller Kerrigan that wires in the Controller's offices had been tapped and that spies and stool pigeons, working for the Mayor, had shadowed Controller Craig and Deputy Kerrigan day and night for two years.

Kerrigan's charges were the outcome of a row in the Sinking Fund Commission meeting Thursday, when Mayor Hylan alleged that bootlegging and race horse betting were going on in one of the offices of the Controller's suite.

"I noticed by the papers that the Controller's Man Friday, Kerrigan, gave out a statement that I had spies watching the Controller and that the wires were being tapped," said the Mayor. "That is an absolute falsehood.

"Information has come to me that bootlegging and race track men were hanging around and going into one of the rooms of Controller Craig's suite. I immediately called the attention of the Police Department to this so that conditions could be stopped, if they existed."

Dislocates Shoulder at Window.

Anna Seper, of 3,705 Hicks Place, Woodside, dislocated her shoulder yesterday in closing a window in her room. She was taken to St. John's Hospital, Long Island City, where it was set, and then returned home.

Aged and Mellowed Like Rare Old Wine

O'Keefe's Ginger Ale owes its incomparable flavor and aroma to the same natural causes that produce fine flavor and aroma in vintage wines.

Like wine, O'Keefe's choice ingredients are mingled and mellowed by time. Like wine O'Keefe's is again aged in the bottle.

And no wine made by monks of old was ever so uniformly good and pure—for every drop of O'Keefe's is like every other drop.

Formerly imported and known in this country as a very high priced Ginger Ale, O'Keefe's is now made in the Berkshire hills from clear spring water of sparkling purity.

This water, captured at its source, is cold and receptive to very high carbonation. Watch the tiny brilliant bubbles in a glass of O'Keefe's and compare its zest with that of any other beverage.

Serve it on your own table. Because it is really "Dry"—not over sweetened,—O'Keefe's is a fitting drink for any banquet, having zest and sparkle without cloying sweetness.

Call up O'Keefe's if you have any difficulty in getting either the regular case size or the handy carry-home-packages of 6 to 12 bottles.

O'Keefe's Ginger Ale comes especially packed in our Handy Carry-Home Package, containing either six or twelve bottles. Order from your dealer.

3 DROWN IN SOUND AS CANOE UPSETS

ONLY ONE BODY RECOVERED

Policeman Rescues Four Off Clason's Point—Two Men Saved In Lower Bay.

Three fatalities in Long Island Sound, the narrow escape of two soldiers from drowning in the lower bay, and the rescue by a policeman of the four occupants of an overturned dinghy off Clason Point were waterfront happenings of Memorial Day. Hundreds of motor boats, yachts, sailing skiffs and canoes were placed in commission by their owners yesterday, but the strong northeast wind that swept over the bay and Sound brought up choppy seas that made the handling of small craft a precarious undertaking.

One man was drowned and it is believed that two youths lost their lives at the same time when the canoe in which they were going on a camping trip capsized in the swirl where the East River meets Long Island Sound, shortly before noon yesterday. Two men sailing past the spot where the accident occurred made a heroic effort to save the drowning man, but were unsuccessful. The body was taken to Fort Totten, where doctors worked over it for three hours. Later it was identified as that of Albert Fousek, 25 years old, of 81 Hallett Street, Astoria.

Fousek, a member of the Whitestone Point Yacht Club for two years, went to the clubhouse at the foot of Eleventh Street, with two lads, one about 16 years old, the other a year older, about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. They changed their clothes and got into outing togs, loaded Fousek's canoe with camping gear and pushed off.

Two hours later Crombie Donaldson of Flushing and Riscio Vermilye of Bayside were sailing their skiff up Little Neck Bay from Bayside and were just rounding Willets Point near Fort Totten when they saw an upturned canoe with a man clinging to the keel.

They put their craft about and headed to the spot. When they were within a few feet of it the man on the canoe was seen to relinquish his hold and slip into the choppy water. Vermilye plunged after him and within a few minutes had brought him to the surface.

Then Donaldson and Vermilye turned their boat and made all possible haste to the long pier at Fort Totten. Dr. Douglas Duval was summoned from the army post and with hospital attendants worked over the man. Then Fousek was taken to the post hospital where further methods of restoration were tried but without any success. The body was removed to Dolan's morgue.

From cards in Fousek's pocket it was learned that he was a member of the Whitestone Point Yacht Club and officials of that organization were notified. They opened Fousek's locker at the clubhouse and found his clothing together with the clothes of the two lads. The steward at the club had seen the three push off earlier in the day and at the time remarked that the canoe was loaded rather deeply for the choppy sea that was running.

Fousek's brother, John, was notified. He said that his brother was married and that his wife and child had gone on a trip over the holidays, though he did not know their destination.

No one could be found who knew anything of the two lads who had accompanied Fousek and there was nothing in their clothing by which they could be identified.

Policeman Albert Hazlitt of the Tremont Station made his eighteenth rescue when he brought to shore a nine-year-old boy, his uncle and two other men whose dinghy had overturned off Harding Park, Clason Point.

Theodore Krumsieck, 285 East 109th Street, the Bronx; his son Edward of 574 East 163d Street; Lawrence Donnelly of the same address, and Donnelly's nephew, Chester Thomas, of 508 Wales Avenue, had been cruising in the elder Krumsieck's motor boat Viking. They anchored just off Clason Point at sundown and embarked in the dinghy.

About a hundred yards from the shore the dinghy overturned. The three men could swim but little. Thomas went down. Young Krumsieck dived for him and the boy got a stranglehold on the man's neck. Both were in danger of drowning when Policeman Hazlitt, who heard the commotion, rushed from his bungalow, pushed his own rowboat into the water and pulled to the spot. He dragged the lad and his rescuer into the boat and with the elder Krumsieck and Donnelly hanging on to the stern took them to shore.

The rescue of two members of the New York National Guard, who were clinging to a capsized and drifting canoe in the choppy waters of the lower bay, supplied a thrill to passengers returning from an outing on the steamer Mandalay. A lookout on the boat was the first to glimpse the heads of the two guardsmen who, with their frail support, were being tossed about in a sea rolling high.

Captain Renshaw of the steamer tried first to reach the men by coasting near to them, while the crew threw ropes across the canoe, but it was soon realized that the soldiers were too exhausted to benefit by this attempt to aid them. Five of the Mandalay's crew were then lowered in a lifeboat.

Before the lifeboat reached the canoe one of the guardsmen lost his grip on its slippery bottom and disappeared for a moment. He came to the surface within a few lengths of the lifeboat and was caught with a boathook and hauled aboard. His companion was saved a moment later, and even the canoe was salvaged by towing it to the steamer.

After the two men, who were in uniform, had been wrapped in blankets and received hot drinks, they said they were Irving Crafton, 24, and Charles Weinek, 19, attached to the First Tank Corps of the New York National Guard, the members of which are in training with the 102d Aviation Squadron of the Guard at Camp Miller, New Dorp, S. I.

They were picked up by the steamer near the West Bank Light in the Swash Channel, about five miles out from New Dorp. Crafton said he and Weinek had not intended to go so far from shore, but had been caught in the heavy wind and were swept along, and finally overturned when they attempted to face the gale.

When the steamer docked at the Battery the two guardsmen were attended by Dr. Hall of the Harbor Police Division, who sent them to the Beekman Street Hospital. There it was said the men would soon recover.

BOYCOTTS 'NEP' EMPLOYER.

Russian Shoemakers' Union Uses New Weapon Against Capitalists.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, May 30.—A new weapon, the boycott, is being utilized against private capitalists with whom their employes are dissatisfied. The Izvestiya today carries the following advertisement:

"The Moscow Province section of the Shoemakers' Federation calls the attention of State co-operative or private enterprises who have any business or industrial relations with C. I. Chernoff, owner of the shoe factory in the village of Golyanof, to the fact that the federation has declared a boycott against Citizen Chernoff for having broken a collective agreement with his employes. The Moscow section of the federation requests the rupture of all business relations with Citizen Chernoff."

The two words, "declares boycott," are printed in half-inch black type.

The "Nep" capitalists are hard to crush nowadays. Zinovieff said in a recent speech, "We threw the capitalists out of the fifth-story window, but before long they bobbed up again as lively as ever."

"One Helluva Night" Next Week.

"One Helluva Night," by Joe Swirling, will open at the Sam H. Harris Theatre next Wednesday night. The Cheese Club is producing the play.

HARRY WEBER NOT ARRESTED

Harry Weber, Secretary of the Catholic Big Brothers of the Bronx, was neither arrested nor served with a summons on a charge of running a lottery in connection with the benegit fashion revue and bazaar of the Catholic Big Brothers at the Hunts Point Palace, as was erroneously stated in THE NEW YORK TIMES of May 27.

The man who was served was John Lyons, 47 West Forty-second Street, manager of the revue, and he was discharged by Magistrate Bernard J. Douras in the Morrisania Court on May 28 when the clerk of the court said there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the drawing of a formal complaint.

AUTO KILLS MAN IN JERSEY.

Victim Struck as He Alights From Bus on Hudson Boulevard.

An unidentified man was fatally injured last night when he alighted from a jitney bus on the Hudson Boulevard at Pavonia Avenue, Jersey City, in front of an automobile driven by John J. McCloskey, 24 years old, of 50 Clerk Street. He died as he was being taken to the City Hospital.

The victim of the accident was about 60 years old, stout and of medium height and wore a dark gray suit and a gray cap. McCloskey was arrested.

Robert Classon of 7,212 Nineteenth Avenue, Brooklyn, suffered a fainting spell yesterday while he was driving with his 7-year-old son Jerome in his automobile in Ocean Parkway, between Avenues E and F, Brooklyn. The car swerved, crashed into a tree and was demolished. Both occupants received cuts and bruises.

Eleanor Elbert, 6 years old, of 1,945 Seventy-fourth Street, Brooklyn, was passing the tree with several other little girls when the automobile ran into it. Her companions managed to get out of the way, but the little girl was cut by fragments of glass from the car. Policeman Thomas Smith, finding that the injuries of the three were slight, took them to a nearby drug store, where they were treated by an ambulance surgeon.

When two automobiles collided shortly before 7 A. M. at Clermont and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, Joseph Unger of 76 Second Place, Brooklyn, the driver of one car, received injuries which were declared on his arrival at the Jewish Hospital to be serious. William Hanley of 314 Hicks Street and Joseph Clare of 88 Amity Street, who were riding with Unger, suffered cuts and bruises.

Baldwin Jarbey, driver of the second car, who gave his address as 62 Joralemon Street, Brooklyn, was arrested on a felonious assault charge, when it was alleged that he had been driving his automobile on the wrong side of the street.

SADDLE RIVER, N. J., May 30.—Charles Raw, 11 years old, of 428 West Ninety-second Street, Manhattan, was killed on a country road near here today. The boy's brother, parents and a party of friends had parked their automobile by the roadside and wandered into a nearby field to pick flowers. The boy was crossing the road when he was struck by an automobile operated by Vincent Slevin of 121 West Franklin Street, Ridgewood, N. J. He died an hour laater in Barnett Hospital, Passaic. Slevin was released on bail.

The strike of the Actors' Equity Association, due on Monday, narrowed down yesterday to three New York productions. "Rain" and "The Nervous Wreck," productions of Sam H. Harris, will close tonight, and so will "Lollipop," produced by Henry W. Savage. "Seventh Heaven," a John Golden production, hitherto on the strike list, will not close tonight, and Mr. Golden will present a new play in Atlantic City next week. It is understood he has made an agreement with Equity.

The remaining three plays on the strike list seem likely to continue their runs. The Globe Theatre, where "Stepping Stones" is the attraction; the Cort, where "The Swan" is being played, and the Ambassador, where "The Outsider" is running, all reported last night that they were selling tickets for next week. Charles Dillingham, producer of "Stepping Stones," is in Europe, but is understood to have made arrangements before his departure for the issuance of independent contracts to his casts in the event of a strike call, and Gilbert Miller, who staged "The Swan," is said to have made a similar arrangement with Equity. A prominent Equity official said last night that no terms had been signed yet. The continuance of "The Outsider," however, comes as something of a surprise, since its producer, William Harris Jr., was thought to be firm in his opposition to the Equity stipulations. The fact that the play is running in a Shubert theatre, however, may explain its continuance.

It is generally recognized by theatrical men that the strike brings on a much more serious situation than is indicated by the small number of productions affected. The round-robin managerial group includes a number of customarily prolific producers, who have lately been curtailing their activities because of the Equity situation. Hence, although only three or four productions will actually halt, a large number of potential productions have been canceled.

It is believed, however, that the situation will be cleared in time for the new season, although it is possible that the season may be retarded several weeks, due to the comparative lack of activity during the present try-out period. In the meantime the matter is likely to continue in the courts, as an appeal will probably be taken from Justice McCook's decision.

Formal confirmation of the closing of "Rain" was received last night in the form of an announcement that Jeanne Eagels, the star of the play, would sail for Europe on Wednesday.

HAROLD HANSON APPOINTED

Will Be Director of the Eastman School of Music.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 30.—Harold Hanson, holder of the Prix de Rome and at present a resident member of the American Academy in Rome, Italy, has been appointed director of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, it was announced by Dr. Rush Rhees, President of the university, today. He will take up his duties here in the Fall.

In 1921 Mr. Hanson was awarded the Prix de Rome and became a Juilliard Musical Foundation fellow of the Academy in Rome. He returned briefly to this country last March to conduct performances of his symphonic poem, "North and West," at Carnegie Hall, New York, by the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Music Class Graduates Tonight.

The nineteenth graduating class of the Institute of Musical Art will give a concert program and receive its diplomas at Aeolian Hall this evening. There are more than 100 in the graduating class. J. Hendersog will be the speaker of the evening and the diplomas and awards will be presented by Dr. Frank Damrosch, director. The Maurice Loeb prize of $1,000 will be given for the highest honor of the year, and the Seligman award of $600 is to be given to the student credited with the best original composition, and the faculty Scholarship to the student having the highest average in the whole year's work.

Goldman Concerts Start Monday.

The eighth annual season of Summer concerts by the Goldman Band under the direction of Edwin Franko Goldman will begin Monday at the new bandstand just completed on the Mall in Central Park. These concerts are made possible by the donations from Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim and Mr. and Mrs. Murry Guggenheim. They are free to the public. During the past year, when sixty concerts were given, the attendance numbered more than a million and a half persons, 40,000 frequently attending a single concert.

to be an independent candidate for the Presidency are being circulated by the National La Follette-for-President Committee, it was learned today. The petition does not ask him to head a third party, and it is understood will not consent to do so on a national scale, S. J. Konenkamp, County Chairman of the conference for progressive political action, said today. Mr. Konenkamp added that whoever might be nominated at Cleveland, Senator La Follette would be "the regular Republican candidate in Wisconsin."

"It is my understanding," he said, "that Senator La Follette will be the choice of the Farmer-Labor Party in Minnesota and probably of the Farmer-Labor Party in North and South Dakota, but that in other States, his name will be entered simply as an independent, without party designation. He has indicated that he will run only if convinced that sufficient numbers of the voters demand it, and the purpose of the petition is to convince him.

"Although several members of the conference for progressive political action are friendly to La Follette they are waiting for the conference to give national expression to its will relative to a candidate at the convention July 4."

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 30.—Political observers are awaiting with interest the outcome of the Iowa primary Monday.

If Brookhart wins the result will be widely interpreted as evidence of persistence of the agricultural discontent that swept him into office two years ago and as symptomatic of conditions that might enable a third party, or an independent candidate for President like La Follette to play havoc with the Republican party in Iowa this year.

As a Presidential candidate in Iowa La Follette would draw his support mainly from the Brookhart Republicans. Some think La Follette might carry the State in a three-cornered fight with President Coolidge and the Democratic candidate. Others, while not doubting La Follette would be that strong, admit that he might split the Republicans sufficiently to give the Democrats Iowa's electoral vote.

CRITICIZES LA FOLLETTE.

Farmer-Labor Leader in New York Is for St. Paul Meeting.

Denial that the Farmer-Labor Party of this State would withdraw from the third party convention to be held at St. Paul on June 17 as the result of the attack upon it by Senator La Follette of Wisconsin was made yesterday by James Campbell of Buffalo, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the United Farmer-Labor Party of New York State. The statement followed a meeting of members of the Executive Committee, called after J. A. H. Hopkins, a member of this committee, had withdrawn the support of the Committee of Forty-eight from the St. Paul convention.

"The United Farmer-Labor Party of New York State accepted the call to the St. Paul convention as a movement for a labor party and not as a nominating convention for La Follette or any other aspirant," Mr. Campbell said. "It sees in La Follette's statement against the convention a mere political manoeuvre to sterilize the La Follette reputation of all taint of radicalism in preparation for the elections.

'As a liberal, Senator La Follette is ready for his own political ends to take advantage of prejudice and fan the flame of class hatred and mistrust. As a Radical he is playing into the hands of Big Business by attempting to sabotage the growing movement for an independent labor party. As a Progressive he is combining with Samuel Gompers against the forward looking forces in the labor movement.

"La Follette fears the participation of the Communists in the St. Paul convention because he knows their objective is the immediate organization of a labor party. La Follette, who represents the interests of the middle class and has no desire to see labor grow into independent political stature, raises the bugaboo of Communist participation as a smoke screen to hide the true basis of his opposition, which is antagonism to a labor party."

Mr. Campbell added that Jerome T. De Hunt, chairman of the American Labor Party, who announced the withdrawal of the Farmer-Labor Party of the State from the St. Paul convention, had no right to speak for the Farmer-Labor Party unless he referred to what Mr. Campbell called a "defunct organization" which had never accepted a call to the convention.

50,000 SEE YANKS DIVIDE TWO GAMES

RUTH GETS HIS NO. 12

PENNOCK IN BEST FORM

Southpaw Blanks Mackmen With Five Hits in Opener, and Also Drives Out a Home Run.

Babe Ruth overlooked a gorgeous chance in the ninth inning and the Yanks thereby lost an opportunity to separate the tail-end Athletics from two holiday games at the Stadium yesterday. The best the champions could earn was an even break, winning the first one by 6 to 0, but dropping the second one 5 to 4, which also was the Mackmen's first victory over the Yanks this year. Close to 50,000 took in the Memorial Day bargain bill.

The even break kept the Yankees in a tie for first place with the Red Sox, who also divided their two games with the Senators.

Call the second game "Babe Ruth's Strike-out, or the Big Bam's Great Failure," and you wouldn't be far wrong. With the Yanks a run behind, the bases full and two out, Ruth walked to the plate in the ninth. It was a highly dramatic moment, almost as tingling and exciting as that other great moment when Ruth faced Bill Ryan of the Giants with the bases full in the last World's Series game. After letting out a roar of anticipation, the crowd sat silent, as it always does when there is drama in the setting.

"He'll swing at anything," remarked a wise old-timer, and he hit the nail squarely on the head. Ruth swung at one fairly near the plate and missed. He couldn't have reached the second pitch with an oar, and he would have needed both an oar and a shovel to touch the third one, which almost tied up the turf two feet outside the plate. Overgrinning, bearing down too hard, the Babe just closed his eyes, prayed silently and then lunged. Connie Mack himself could have fanned the big slugger at that moment.

The ninth inning uprising began with two out. Joe Bush hit for Sam Jones and beat out an infield single. Schang, pinch batter for Witt, walked, and Stanley Baungartner filled the bases by hitting Dugan. Then along came Ruth, and pretty soon out went Ruth.

Miller Hits Homer.

With the Mackmen three runs behind going into the eighth, Bing Miller socked one into the stands with two on the bases and one run in. This broke up the game. Jones had pitched good ball up to that time. Ed Rommel, the Athletic ace, was hit briskly in six innings, giving away to a pinch hitter in the seventh.

Herb Pennock, the Yanks' willowy left-hander, did a tidy job in the first game and disposed of the athletics all by himself. Limiting the visitors to the slim quota of five hits and no runs, he drove more than enough runs to win across the plate with a home run into the right field bleachers with two on in the fourth. It was Pennock's second homer within a week, but only the third of his long and honorable career, showing how a man can change his deepest rooted habits late in life. Herb is now ahead of his home record for 1923 and all other years.

The other Yankees just strung along with Herbie. Babe Ruth's twelfth homer of the year turned out to be merely decorative. It wasn't needed to win, but it will come in handy for the home run record, which has been languishing lately. Ruth's third, unquestioning homer for the start, there being no doubt about this one. It was fairly well out in the bleachers and up in the rear rows. Nobody was on base.

Pennock's pitching was an exquisite bit of work, a gem almost without a flaw. In six of the innings the Mackmen receded in one-two-three order, and four of them went down on strikes. Pennock gave no bases on balls and was the soul of steadiness, whereas the tall Bryan Harris was rapped opportunely in seven innings, the Yanks making six runs out of their six hits. Bob Hasty toiled the two last rounds.

Double for Ruth.

Ruth injected a two-bagger in the opening frame of the first tilt and Dugan, who was on first, came all the way home. Under cover of the throw to the plate Babe tried to sneak to third and would have made it if he hadn't overallid the bag.

His twelfth homer in the third made the Yanks two strong, and when Pipp and Schang walked in the fourth and Pennock confounded the Athletics by slapping the pill into the bleachers, the game was safe for the Yanks. Schang was walked intentionally to get at Pennock, but Herb gave the Mackian strategy the laugh by pickling one in the groove at three and two.

The Yanks scored their sixth run in the sixth. Johnson bunted safely and ran to third when Harris threw past Hauser. Scott's single through the infield, which was drawn in, scored Johnson.

Singles by Hauser and Simmons and a forceout in the second inning gave the Athletics a one-run start in the second affray, and when Galloway followed with a single that sent Miller to third with one out, it looked foreboding for Sam Jones. But the Schoolmaster nailed Perkins on a foul and Rommel on strikes and didn't get into trouble again until the fourth, which he pulled out of safely.

In this same fourth the Yanks went ahead on Meusel's double to left, Johnson's triple to left with two out and an accidental single by Scott, the ball falling safely in centre when Galloway played it poorly.

The sixth saw the end of Rommel, the Yanks scoring twice. Ruth bunted and beat it out, thanks to a fast getaway from the plate and good speed down the path. Meusel singled him to second, but Riconda made a smart catch of Pipp's bunt fly and doubled Bob at first. Johnson, again coming to the rescue, shot his second triple over Simmons's head and scored on Scott's one-base thrust to centre. Amos Strunk batted for Rommel in the next inning and Baumgartner took up the hurling burden.

In the eighth the Mackmen clubbed Jones for enough runs to win on singles by Riconda, Welch and Simmons and Miller's home run which hopped into the left field stand with two on the bases.

Ruth got to third with one out in the eighth, but Pipp and Johnson dribbled sadly to Pitcher Baumgartner. The melancholy ninth has already been narrated.

GIANTS GIVE PHILS DOUBLE THRASHING

Triumph by 11-5 and 6-5, Making 20 Hits, Three of Them Homers, in Opener.

WILSON WINS LATER GAME

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—Using their bats to good effect in both games, the Giants rompel off with a double-header with the Phillies today before 20,000 spectators. The score of the first tussle was 11 to 5 and that of the second 6 to 5.

Virgil Barnes pitched the full distance for the Giants in the first game, more than holding his own against three enemy pitchers. Wilbur Hubbell started against Barnes but took the count in the fifth inning. He was followed by Ray Steineder, who was removed for a pinch hitter in the sixth, Bert Lewis finishing up. In the second game neither Wayland Dean nor Clarence Mitchell, who opposed each other on the mound, could survive. Both passed out in the seventh inning, Dean for a pinch hitter and Mitchell to make room for another pitcher. Following Dean came Joe Oeschger and Claude Jonnard, and after Mitchell came Johnny Couch, Hubbell and Hal Carlson.

A powerful attack was put on by the Giants in the first game. They hammered out twenty hits for a total of thirty-three bases, three of their hits being homers. Two of these were delivered by Frank Snyder in consecutive innings, while the third was delivered by Billy Southworth. For the Phillies, Walter Holke and Cy Williams also hit for the circuit. Heinie Groh was very able with the stick in this combat, making four hits in five trips to the plate.

Young Put Out of Game.

The second game was better than the first, although with frequent changes in the lineup of both teams it was wild enough. One change in the Giant lineup was suggested by Umpire Bill Klem. In the fifth inning Bill took offense when Ross Young, displeased with his judgment of a strike, hurled his bat to the ground. Klem ordered him out of the game and Southworth, who was resting on the bench while Lew Wilson patrolled centre field, was called into action and posted in right field.

Action in this game was centered in the second, fourth, sixth, seventh and ninth innings. In the second the Phils got off to a lead and in the fourth they were overhauled. In the sixth they registered a new lead, but in the seventh the Giants went to the front, this time to stay. Control came into the game in the ninth to save it for the Giants by fanning two men with the tying run on second base and the winning run on first. The Phils got only five hits in this contest, but Dean and Oeschger were wild and so made trouble for themselves and their mates.

The four-run lead of the Phillies in the second inning was made up of singles by Ford and Holke, an error by Frisch, a three-base hit by Jimmy Wilson, and a Mitchell to Judnich out. But in the fourth inning the Giants rushed four runs over the plate on a single by Lew Wilson, a pass to Meusel, a double by Kelly, a pass to Jackson, a sacrifice by Groh and a single by Gowdy.

Ford was hit by a pitched ball in the sixth inning and moved up on Holke's out, he remained at second base when Wrightstone popped to Gowdy and Henline was purposely passed but scored when Mitchell singled to centre.

The game was won by the Giants in the seventh. Gowdy singled to right and O'Connell was put on to run for him. Snyder batted for Dean and singled to left, but was forced by Southworth. Frisch boosted a sacrifice fly to Williams on which O'Connell scored, after which Wilson doubled against the right field fence, scoring Southworth with what proved to be the deciding run.

Jonnard to the Rescue.

Oeschger got into trouble and out again in the eighth inning, fanning Lee, a pinch hitter, with the bases filled, for the last out in that inning, but he could not get through the ninth. Harper had been retired when Oeschger lost his grip and walked Williams and Moksn. Jonnard hustled in from the bullpen and proceeded to fan Ford and Holke, and so put an end to the game.

The double-header drew one of the largest baseball crowds this city has seen in recent years. The park, which has a seating capacity of less than 20,000, held fully that number, some of the spectators clinging to girders in the stand, while others lined the fence-tops.

An equally large crowd was turned away when the gates were closed. There was some disorder in the streets surrounding the park, although the police managed to get Umpire Klem's tator fell from the top of the right field fence during the period between games and suffered a broken leg.

ROBINS TAKE TWO FROM THE BRAVES

Win First in 12 Innings by 6-5 and Second by 5-1—28,000 at Ebbets Field.

TIE FIRST GAME IN NINTH

Brooklyn Players Make Three Runs by Pounding Out Five Hits—Yeargin Driven to Cover.

The Brooklyn Robins scored two victories over the Braves in the holiday double-header before a crowd of 28,000 at Ebbets Field yesterday, and remained in the first division. The first contest was a hard fought one, the Robins winning it in the twelfth inning by a score of 6 to 5. The score of the second game was 5 to 1, and in it Osborne was master of all the Braves but Gibson. Four singles were made off Osborne and three of them went to Gibson, whose last hit saved his team from being shut out.

Each team used three pitchers in the first game. Dutch Ruether, Art Decatur and Dutch Henry pitched for the Robins, and Bill Cooney, Jess Barnes and Joe Genewich performed in the order named for the Braves. Henry was the winning hurler.

In the second inning the Braves got to Ruether and scored all their runs on four hits, a pass and errors by High and Wheat. The hits were made by Tierney, Padgett, Felix and Bancroft. Padgett's blow was a double that scored Tierney with the first run. Padgett rode home on a single by Felix and Cooney scored on a single to left by Bancroft. Wheat made a wild throw to the plate and Felix counted. Bancroft reached third on Zack's error and scored when High fumbled Cunningham's grounder.

Robins Score Two Runs.

The Robins did not get a hit off Cooney until the fifth when Bailey got Singles by Nels and Johnston, an error scored two runs on a pass to Ruether. Singles by Nels and Johnson, an error by Padgett and Stock's sacrifice fly.

The Robins thrilled the big crowd when they tied the score in the ninth on five hits. Bailey and High led off with singles and, after Taylor fanned, De Berry batted for Ruether and dropped a short line drive to left that filled the bases. Grimes batted for Loftus and Manager Bancroft sent Barnes to the mound. Griffith then took Grimes's place and singled, scoring Bailey and High. Johnston singled, and Klugman, who ran for De Berry, scored with the tying run.

Decatur succeeded Ruether on the mound, but in the eleventh he gave way to Henry, who fanned Stengel with two men on the bases. Barnes was removed for a pinch hitter in the tenth and Genewich took his place. Stock, first up for the Robins in the twelfth, reached second, when Cunningham muffed his fly. Bailey sacrificed and the first ball Genewich pitched to Taylor was a wild toss that enabled Stock to score with the deciding run.

Jim Yeargin opposed Osborne in the second game, and in the fourth the Robins bunched four hits for three runs. Wheat opened with a single and stopped at third when Fournier doubled. Stock sent them both home with a single to left. Stock reached second on the throw to the plate and scored when Griffith singled to right.

Yeargin Driven From Box.

In the next frame Yeargin was driven from the box. Loftus led off with a single and, after Johnston sacrificed, Wheat doubled, sending Loftus home. A single by Fournier scored Wheat and brought Bachelder to Yeargin's rescue. He prevented further scoring.

Osborne did not allow a run until the ninth, when Felix walked, took second on an infield out and scored when Gibson singled for his third hit. Osborne fanned eight men.

VILLA DEFEATS ASH AND RETAINS TITLE

13,000 WITNESS BATTLE

LOSER'S FOOTWORK CLEVER

Also Uses Left Jab Effectively and Is Fully as Fresh as Titleholder at the Finish.

Pancho Villa, holder of the world's bantamweight championship, gained the decision over Frankie Ash, English boxer, in their titular fifteen-round battle at Henderson's Bowl, Brooklyn, last night. Villa won the decision at the end of the battle, but the verdict did not meet with the approval of the crowd, although it was the only one that could be rendered.

The Englishman, long and rangy and enjoying a tremendous advantage over the Filipino in the matter of reach, proved an enigma to the champion. His long left kept Villa at bay most of the time, and the latter, although the heavier punisher of the two, failed to land solidly enough to stop the British fighter, who was fully as fresh as his opponent when the bout ended.

Ash, making his first bow to New York fight fans, demonstrated that he is lacking in anything approaching a knockout punch. At least that was the impression he gave last night. His main asset was a left jab, and on only one or two occasions did he use his right for any purpose other than to ward off Villa's blows. His left-hand pecks were annoying to the champion, but that was all. They lacked even so much as a sting and the champion emerged from the test unmarked.

The fight was witnessed by a comparatively small crowd, the attendance being 13,000, whereas the bowl seats about 20,000.

Officials of the Nostrand Athletic Club, under whose auspices the bout was held, ascribed the poor attendance to the weather and to the court litigation they were forced to go through before the bout, postponed from last Tuesday night, could be held.

Bout Proves Unsatisfactory.

The championship bout was unsatisfactory from many angles and hardly compensated sitting through it in the big open air arena, which was swept by cold winds. The weather perhaps had something to do with the showing that the champion made, for he was by no means the Villa that he was when he took the title away from Jimmy Wilde.

He was utterly unable to fathom the phantom-like tactics of the British fighter and missed repeatedly. Although he landed frequently enough in the course of the bout, most of his blows found resting spots on Ash's black and gloves, and on only two occasions was the Englishman in anything that bordered on the danger line.

Early in the fight Villa cut Ash's mouth and later he reopened the cut during a mix-up on the ropes. On another occasion toward the finish of the battle he staggered the Englishman with a series of lefts and rights. In the second round Ash slipped through the ropes. His fall, however, was not due to Villa's punches but to his own dancing tactics.

Ash possessed only two boxing virtues, clever footwork and a left jab, and it was due to both that he succeeded in staying the limit. He did not show any particular aptitude so far as punching ability went, and only infrequently did he call his right hand into play. On those few times his blows lacked steam.

Shows Rare Footwork.

His footwork, however, was another matter, and in comparison Villa appeared awkward. The Briton, on his toes most of the time, kept waltzing around the Filipino throughout the fight, stepping back out of range of the majority of Villa's swings and making the champion miss frequently. Along toward the close of the battle Villa made a serious bid to land home a finishing blow, but he was unable to find the Englishman.

The semi-final bout resulted in a verdict in favor of Mike Ballerino of Hoboken, who defeated Kid Sullivan of Brooklyn after twelve fast rounds of boxing. Ballerino carried the battle all the way. He weighed 129 and Sullivan 129¼.

In the preliminary four-rounder George Doherty of the Bronx, a brother of the late Frankie Jerome, received the decision over Claude Hancock of Brooklyn. Doherty weighed 128½ and his opponent 124¼ pounds. Vic Brog of Pittsburgh gained the decision over Joe Scrogni of Harlem in the six-rounder, the boys weighing 147½ and 148½ respectively.

STORY OF THE BATTLE TOLD ROUND BY ROUND

Villa and Ash entered the ring at 9:50 P. M., the Englishman with his head wrapped in towels and bundled in a heavy bathrobe. Villa wore a gray fedora hat which he tossed out of the ring as soon as he had climbed through the ropes. The men were introduced and their weights announced as follows: Ash, 110½; Villa, 112.

First Round.

Second Round.

Third Round.

Ash continued to dance around. Villa scored with rights and lefts to the head, making Ash back away from the range of fire. He was short with a right to the stomach and the Englishman cleverly avoided several rights and lefts which the champion aimed at his body. Villa caught Ash in one of the corners of the ring, doubling him up with a heavy left to the mid section. Ash jabbed Villa twice with his left. Ash's clever footwork enabled him to keep out of range of the champion.

Fourth Round.

Villa ripped in left and right uppercuts and Ash jabbed the champion. Ash landed lightly with a left, and they went into a clinch. Villa held his head down while Ash tapped him with several rights. In a clinch Villa landed several blows on the Englishman's body and drove him across the ring with a bull-like rush, landing several lefts and rights to the body on the way. Once more Villa held out his jaw for Ash to play on, standing unmindful of the blows. The only hand that Ash used up to this time was his left, which he kept shooting in the general direction of Villa's jaw. The blows were light, but they counted toward points just the same.

Fifth Round.

After a few seconds of dancing, Villa shot lefts and rights to Ash's head, but the Englishman stepped out of harm's way. Villa continued to take his time, and then suddenly shot harmless lefts and rights to the head and body. During a clinch, Ash led with a light left, and then shot out a right cross to Villa's head, but the blow failed to reach him. At the end of a clinch toward the end of the round, Villa was soundly booed by the crowd for hitting after the bell.

Sixth Round.

Seventh Round.

Eighth Round.

Villa forced Ash around the ring to open the round, catching the Englishman with a heavy left as the latter was backing away. In a clinch Villa inflicted several body punches on his opponent. Ash jabbed Villa with a left and followed with a right to the jaw. The English boxer was cheered when he danced away from one of Villa's rushes and escaped harm. He stepped into Villa and counted twice. Just before the end of the round Ash stumbled as he was trying to get away from Villa's attack, but he was up without a count. He appeared to be fairly fresh as the round ended.

Ninth Round.

Tenth Round.

Ash fended off a left with his arm, but Villa shot light lefts and rights to his head and then missed a wicked left hook. He swung for Ash's head as the latter was coming off the ropes, but his judgment was faulty. Ash continued to dance out of harm's way as Villa bored in, but the latter made him wince when he bored two lefts into the Englishman's stomach. Villa wrestled Ash away during a clinch and landed a light left and right to the body as the round ended.

Eleventh Round.

Twelfth Round.

Ash led with his left to the head. Villa swung two ineffective rights to the head and they clinched. He backed Ash into a corner with two heavy lefts to the stomach and missed a hard right to the head as the Englishman came off the ropes. He reopened the cut on Ash's mouth with a hard right to the face and then shot lefts and rights to Ash's jaw. Under a fusillade of blows Ash backed into his own corner. Villa nearly swung himself to the canvas as he missed a right swing just before the round ended.

Thirteenth Round.

Villa ripped three lefts into Ash's stomach without a return as the round opened. During a clinch both landed ineffectual body blows. Ash tapped Villa five times without a return until the champion forced him up against the ropes and shot a right to Ash's jaw. He jolted Ash with a left uppercut. Villa missed several swings to the jaw. Ash landed a right to the champion's head, Villa rushed Ash to the ropes but failed to land several vicious aimed at the challenger's jaw. Ash appeared to be on the road to a finish during the round, but was fit when the bell sounded.

Fourteenth Round.

Villa tore into Ash to open the round, forcing the Englishman to give ground and battering him with lefts and rights to the body and stomach. Ash jabbed Villa's jaw with a series of lefts, but they lacked steam. He forced Villa to the ropes and then slipped to the canvas as he was trying to get away. He forced Villa on to the ropes and battered the champion with lefts and rights to the head. The Englishman again slipped and, as he was going in, dropped to one knee as Villa ripped in a hard left to the kidneys. They were locked in a clinch at the gong.

Fifteenth Round.

They shook hands and after sparring cautiously Villa landed a left to the body. He rushed Ash around the ring, driving in several lefts to the body. He battered Ash's ribs with several hard lefts and rights. Ash slipped once more and Villa sent in a heavy right. Ash forced Villa into a corner but failed to do any damage. They exchanged rights to the jaw in the centre of the ring. Villa tapped Ash with a light left coming out of a clinch. Ash again forced the champion into a corner and jabbed him with lefts. They were mixing furiously in Villa's corner as the bout ended.

CARPENTIER IN RING WITH GIBBONS TODAY

French and American Boxers Will Draw $250,000 for 10-Round No-Decision Battle.

St. Paul Heavyweight Favored to Win at Michigan City—Each Contestant Confident.

Special to The New York Times.

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., May 30.—Tom Gibbons, St. Paul light-heavyweight, is a 1-to-2 favorite here tonight that he will knock out Georges Carpentier, soldier-fighter of France, in their ten-round no-decision bout tomorrow in Floyd Fitzsimmons's sky-blue arena, on the outskirts of this usually quiet little town. Even money is being wagered on the unofficial decision if the battle goes the limit, with the indications, however, that Gibbons will enter the ring the favorite to carry off the unofficial verdict.

Everything is in readiness for the international battle. Interest in the bout is at a high pitch, according to the announcements of officials at fight headquarters. Chief interest, of course, is manifest in the Middle West section of the country, where Gibbons is extremely popular. Advance reservations for the tickets, however, indicate that New York, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Buffalo, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Winnipeg and Montreal, in Canada, and Detroit will be represented, as well as Chicago, Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Advance sales of tickets have approximated $200,000. The gate is expected to reach between $230,000 and $250,000, with the chances of $300,000 being the high-water mark in receipts if the fight is a sell-out.

"May the better man win," was the way Gibbons expressed himself tonight. His statement follows:

"I intend to make this an aggressive bout. I consider Carpentier one of the best boxers I ever met. He is aggressive, too. While there is no title at stake the outcome means much to each of us. The conditions under which I have trained have been ideal. I am stronger, hit more accurately and harder than at Shelby last Summer. I'm all set; that's about all I can say. May the better man win."

Carpentier Is Confident.

Carpentier said that he never felt better in many years than he does tonight. He is confident of beating Gibbons. His statement follows:

"This is not the usual pre-battle statement. It is not for me to repeat the stereotyped statement—'I am in perfect condition.' Today I wish to announce that I have not felt as I do in many years. I am in superb condition, the result of several months of systematic training and the best of care from my manager and handlers. I never predict before any match on the outcome, but I can add with all sincerity that I never felt more confident in my life."

According to present plans the men will begin hostilities some time between 4 and 5 o'clock unless present arrangements are unexpectedly changed. As the program is at present mapped out the arena gates will be thrown open at noon. Several unadvertised bouts are scheduled to begin at 2 o'clock. The regular card, consisting of two four-round bouts, two six-round bouts and an eight-round bout between Sammy Mandell, Rockford (Ill.) lightweight, and Paul Fritch, French boxer, who came to this country with Carpentier, will start at 3 o'clock.

It is planned to put the Mandell-Fritch bout on after the Gibbons-Carpentier battle, thus confining the ring activity on the regular card to a time consumption of one hour and sixteen minutes, exclusive of probable knockouts.

If this schedule is followed, therefore, Gibbons and Carpentier are expected to enter the ring before 4:30 Central Standard Time, or 6:30 New York Daylight Saving Time. The results of the bout, under this arrangement, should be known in New York about 7 o'clock tomorrow night.

Trained to the Minute.

The boxers are trained to the minute. Carpentier has impressed critics with his latent boxing brilliance. He seldom ever discloses his real form in public training. Onlookers at his camp have been convinced, however, that the French boxer is bigger and stronger than he was three years ago, when he was knocked out by Dempsey in four rounds, and that he is as fast and agile and as rapid in his acceptance of an opening and as fast and sure in executing his attack when such an opening is represented, as he ever was.

Gibbons, too, has impressed those who have witnessed his workouts. The veteran St. Paul boxer apparently has all his wonderful boxing skill, defensive cleverness and speed and grace on attack.

They are expected to weigh around 175 pounds when they step on the scales in the local Chamber of Commerce offices tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, where each will also be subjected to a thorough physical examination. One of the problems of the bout will be whether Gibbons's deadly body fire will claim another victim, or whether Carpentier can penetrate the defense of the greatest defensive boxer in the ring today and force Gibbons to experience his first knockdown in a lengthy career.

One of the interested spectators at the battle will be young Stribling of Macon, Ga., light heavyweight, who arrived here this morning with his mother and father, to challenge the winner from the ring tomorrow. It is reported here that plans already are under way for a bout between Stribling and Carpentier, in the event the Frenchman comes out of his engagement tomorrow without serious injury to himself or his reputation.

Predictions of a Knockout.

A majority of the visiting experts, particularly those from the East, who have seen both men in actual ring combat unhesitatingly declare that Gibbons will knock out his rival. The length of the bout in the calculations of these critics varies. Some predict a knockout in three rounds, others in five and still others in seven. The majority, however, expect a knockout to end the contest and Gibbons to score it.

The basis for these predictions is the wonderful defensive ability of Gibbons and the St. Paul boxer's brilliant work on the attack. With his left hook to the body, a blow which Gibbons has perfected to a high state of proficiency, the St. Paul boxer is expected to wear his rival down, the meanwhile protecting his own chin from Carpentier's deadly right overhand blow, the punch with which the Frenchmen sent Dempsey back on his heels in that memorable battle in Jersey City. In physique the ring rivals are practically evenly matched. Neither enjoys a distinct advantage.

Gibbons is fighting on a percentage basis. He had contracted to accept 30 per cent. of the receipts and will get a sizable sum if the supply of tickets is entirely disposed of. Carpentier is guaranteed a flat sum of $70,000, of which he has already collected $2,500 as training expenses, and a similar sum for expenses incurred in his trip to this country from his native France. The choice $20 ringside seats have been disposed of. The $15 tickets are not proving so popular with the purchasers, it is said, and there is a possibility that this supply of pasteboards will be reduced in price at right time if a last-minute demand justifies it. The $10 tickets are going rapidly and the $5 tickets will not be placed on sale until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

HARVARD MISPLAYS HELP BROWN TO WIN

PROVIDENCE, May 30.—Harvard fell in defeat, 4 to 1, here today in its annual Memorial Day baseball game with Brown University. The largest crowd of the season, 7,000, turned out to witness the contest, which for the most part was well played, but at other times was marked by ragged work. Although the Brunonians outhit the Crimson players, their runs were directly traceable to Harvard errors and a passed ball by Samborski in the sixth inning, when Brown scored two runs.

Brown's first run was made in the opening inning on singles by Ruckstull and Cutler. Harvard came back in the second and tied the score when Hammond, who had gained third base on his single, a base on balls to Jenkins and a sacrifice hit by Hill, stole home while Neubauer was winding up to pitch to Samborski. The Brunonians scored their second run in the fifth.

EASTON, Pa., May 30.—With a cold west wind blowing a gale across March Field, Lafayette defeated Bucknell, 7 to 1, this afternoon. Hitting in the pinches and taking advantage of the breaks were responsible for the Maroon's victory. Ernst, Lafayette's centre fielder, hit a homer in the seventh.

BRACADALE IS VICTOR IN HISTORIC WITHERS

ARCADY WINS THE JUVENILE

Bracadale, chestnut son of Fair-Play and Loch Linnhe and star of the galaxy of three-year-olds in the Rancocas Stable, yesterday afternoon handsomely qualified for the Belmont Stakes next Saturday afternoon, when he handily defeated nine others of his own age in the historic Withers Stakes over the mile course at Belmont Park. More than 25,000 wildly enthusiastic race followers wildly cheered the winner, as he galloped past the winning post two and a half lengths in front of Lee Rosenberg's Sun Pal, the surprise of the contest. Bracadale, on which Earl Sande had the leg up, ran the mile in 1:39 over a track that was good, but far from being fast. The winner earned $19,000 for his owner, to which Sheridan added $750 by finishing third. The stable was the favorite, backed down to even money at post time.

A holiday crowd that packed the grandstand and lawns and crowded the clubhouse enclosure, witnessed some brilliant racing on the holiday card. They turned out by the thousands despite the threat of rain and the piercing wind that swept the course all afternoon. They saw Jockey E. Esplin, the English steeplechase rider with the stable of Major Frank A. White, fall with Mercurius in the cross-country event, fracturing the same collarbone he broke at the Hunts meeting in April.

Interest centred in the Withers, as it was considered this year more than ever a real test for the Belmont. Sande rode yesterday for the first time since his recent suspension, and proved that he had lost none of his skill during his enforced retirement, as he rode a masterly race on the winner. His mount had drawn the extreme outside position, but he was not out in front when the barrier went up to a fine start, as August Belmont's Ladkin at once shot ahead, with Sun Pal in close attendance on the outside.

Sande Rates Mount Back of Pace.

Sande awaited his opportunity, rating Bracadale along back of the pace with his stable champion Sheridan. Ladkin finally cracked and Sun Pal raced him down, although the Belmont colt held on well to the end. On the turn Bracadale began to move up and passed Ladkin before they entered the stretch. Sun Pal had half a length on Ladkin, when Bracadale challenged and the duel was short.

A roar went up from the stands as the favorite began to forge to the front in the great drive down the homestretch, gaining a little with every stride. He was soon clear of Sun Pal and the latter was now threatened by Sheridan as they neared the finish, but Clarence Kummer was able to keep Sun Pal in front of the new danger and took the place by a length and a half. Ladkin was two and a half lengths back, five lengths in front of the H. P. Whitney entry, Transmute. The rest of the field was well strung out.

Two added starters brought the field in the Juvenile stakes to ten and they made a brilliant dash over the five furlongs of the straight course for the $5,600 in added money. It was the forty-eighth running of the stake and the name of H. P. Whitney's Arcady, Son of Peter Pan and Quercs, was added to the distinguished roll of winners of the two-year-classic. He had shown himself a good colt when he finished second behind his stablemate Reminder on Tuesday in the first race he had ever run. This time Reminder finished far back, being shut off.

They were sent away to a good start, but like all of the races on the straight course there was a lot of swerving and crowding and the horse that is shut out seldom gets a fair show. Arcady soon came to the front, after out running R. T. Wilson Jr.'s Faddist and was closely followed by the Riviera Stable's Fast Mail.

Fast Mail Finishes Second.

At the end Arcady was drawing away to beat Fast Mail by a length and a quarter. The latter was two and a half lengths in front of Faddist, which held on to gain the short end of the stake by a head from J. S. Cosden's Laplander. The race was run in the slow time of 1:01 4-5 and was worth $11,600 to the owner of the winner.

SUBURBAN HANDICAP AT BELMONT TODAY

Eight Named Overnight, With Chacolet Probable Favorite, for Famous Race.

A small but select field will go to the post in the famous Suburban Handicap over the course of a mile and a quarter at the Belmont Park race course this afternoon. Eight of the best of various ages in training have been named overnight to compete for the $7,500 in added money. Hal Prince Headley's great race mare Chacolet undoubtedly will go to the post the choice of the public. The six-year-old mare will take up 120 pounds. Only two mares, Imp and Beldame, have ever won the Suburban.

Instead of Zev, the Rancocas Stable will pin its faith to old Mad Hatter—top weight with 125 pounds—and the three-year-old Mad Play, which did not race to expectations in the Preakness and Kentucky Derby. Three-year-olds have won the classic on five occasions and three will make the attempt this afternoon—Mad Play, the Oak Ridge Stable's Laurano, winner of the Metropolitan Handicap on the opening day of the meeting, and the Belair Stud's Aga Khan, which has bottom weight of 97 pounds.

The field for the Suburban, with the weights, jockeys and probable odds, will be as follows:

Horse.	Wt.	Jockey.	Prob. Odds.
*Mad Hatter	123	Sande	2 to 1
Chacolet	120	F. Smith	7 to 5
Rialto	118	Coltiletti	4 to 1

PRINCETON BEATS ARIZONA FOUR, 6-2

NEWBOLD SCORES 4 GOALS

Bancroft Stars at Back for the Victors—Westerners Seem Nervous and Are Outgeneraled.

The Princeton polo team, working with the same smoothness which carried it to the Eastern intercollegiate championship, yesterday won the first game of the series for the national college title from the University of Arizona four, leaders in the West, on the field at Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, before a crowd of 10,000 persons. However, despite Princeton's 6 to 2 victory yesterday, the championship still remains in doubt, for the Western horsemen came forward with a rush the last half of the game and held the Easterners on even terms for the final three periods of play.

With Chick Newbold at No. 1 carrying the burden of the attack and T. N. Bancroft at back displaying the best defensive game that a college player has shown this season, Arizona met a strong combination and one to which they had to submit, but they did not lose without a struggle.

Newbold was responsible for four of the six points that the Princeton team registered, but Bancroft was responsible for at least a dozen that Arizona failed to score after bringing the ball close to the Princeton goal. Throughout the game Arizona had the ball in its opponents' territory, but when it had been carried to within scoring distance Bancroft would ride in at reckless speed, swing his mallet and the ball would speed through the air toward the sideboards and out of the danger zone. The few times that Bancroft was successfully ridden out of the way, overanxiousness cost the Arizona team precious points, as the Westerners swung wildly when near their objective.

Tigers Are Better Mounted.

On the other hand the Princeton players made good on nearly every opportunity that presented itself for them to score. They rode with the calmness of veterans yet with the aggressiveness that has made them the outstanding college four in this section of the country. They played their positions as they should be played, stringing out down the field and depending on their teamwork instead of on individual brilliance as was the case with the Arizona riders.

The famed Western ponies were courageous little animals, and they gave all they had to win, but they were unable to keep pace in most instances with the thoroughbred mounts which the Princeton team rode. When it came to a matter of checking a dash and turning quickly, the Arizona ponies could do as well as their opponents, but when it came to a race for the ball the Western mounts were outdistanced.

Major General Robert Lee Bullard was in the box of honor, and the two teams rode up in line before him, saluting with their mallets before the contest started. General Bullard welcomed the Arizona players to the East, complimented the Princeton four on having earned the right to represent this section of the country in the series for the national college championship and the game was on.

Arizona Seems Nervous.

From the very start Princeton took the offensive. The Arizona players seemed nervous with the knowledge of how the citizens of Tucson were depending on them, having received a telegram bearing the signatures of 1,200 followers from that city just before they rode onto the field. The play was kept in the centre of the field for the first few minutes, and then out of the scrimmage the ball sailed toward the Arizona goal. Newbold outraced the rest of the field in the chase after the sphere and with a drive that carried forty yards sent it spinning between the posts to score the Tigers' first point in three minutes from the time the game got under way.

Arizona settled down after that, and by persistent riding and short strokes brought the ball near to the Princeton goal. Twice the Westerners brought it up to scoring distance and twice Bancroft sent it out of danger again. The second time that the Tiger back saved his goal with a backhand, and W. H. Jackson, Princeton's No. 3, picked up the ball and with a series of long drives that carried straight down the centre of the field while he kept in front of the flying horsemen in pursuit he sent it finally between Arizona's posts for another point for Princeton.

Paul Sawyer, Arizona's No. 2, carried the ball in front of the Princeton goal again at the start of the second period and he had a clear shot of about ten yards in order to score. He swung his mallet sharply and there was a click as the ball started straight for the opening between the posts, but Bancroft again was to be reckoned with. He rode in at top speed, jabbed his mallet into the ground and in the path of the ball, stopped it and then sent it sailing out of danger. A less experienced player might have swung at the flying sphere before stopping it safely. It was just one example of Bancroft's thorough knowledge of his position and the game which he played so brilliantly.

Holbrook Scores for Victors.

Toward the end of the chukker Princeton finally worked the ball into Arizona's territory. Monty Woody, the Western back, started it out of danger, but Bancroft took a backhand stroke and Newbold sent it through. The same Woody had a chance from the foul line in the third period, but his drive was wide by inches, and a little later Dave Holbrook, the Tiger No. 2, hooked the ball off the sideboards, brought it into the centre of the field and scored another Princeton goal. The half ended with the Eastern champions leading, 4 to 0.

Sawyer took the toss-in at the start of the fourth period and carried the ball down the field to register Arizona's first point, but this was taken back by Newbold, who counted for Princeton after a scrimmage shortly after. The fifth chukker added nothing to either team's total, but in the sixth Captain Jimmy Hearon of the Arizona four made a goal after he had been turned back twice by Bancroft's work. Newbold took this point back soon after, however, and Princeton still had its margin of four goals when the last gong sounded.

French Players "Fine," but Fans "Poor Losers," Members Say.

The American Olympic Rugby football team, which was recently booed and hissed when it beat the French team by a score of 17 to 3, returned on the George Washington yesterday. The members of the team will stay for two or three days at the Park Avenue Hotel before returning to their homes in California. They declared that the opposing French players had been "fine," but added that the French fans seemed to be "poor losers."

WETHERED LOSES IN BRITISH GOLF

HOLDERNESS WINS TWICE

Beats Harris, 2 and 1, in Sixth Round, and Murray, 3 and 2, Earning Right to Meet Storey Today.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, May 30.—E. F. Storey, captain of the Cambridge University golf team, and E. W. E. Holderness, former titleholder, will meet in the thirty-six-hole final of the British amateur golf championship on the St. Andrews course tomorrow as the result of today's matches. Storey's victims in the sixth and semi-final rounds were John Caven and Roger Wethered, present holder of the title. Holderness's victims were Robert Harris and W. A. Murray. The prophets are favoring Holderness to win the final. It should be a great match in any case.

Holderness is approaching middle age, but his past experience in match play should stand him in good stead against his young opponent. However, Storey has youth on his side and the heart of a lion.

Wethered's defeat in the semi-final was the surprise of the day. He proved himself a better golfer than Storey, but was far from being in his best form and when given opportunities he threw them away. He was beaten by two holes.

Wethered had previously, in the sixth round, defeated the Irish player, J. D. McCormack, in match play which was remarkable for its extreme slowness. McCormack was so deliberate in everything that he did, especially in putting, that it took fifty-five minutes to play five holes. It should be explained, however, that McCormack is a war cripple who spent six years abed through spinal injuries and now, when he plays golf, is compelled to wear a steel jerkin.

Murray was mechanically precise in defeating D. H. Kyle in the sixth round by 3 and 2, and in the semi-finals he and Holderness played the best golf of the day, with luck slightly in favor of Holderness, who won, 3 and 2.

Epinard, Slow to Reach Form, To Be Worked Hard in England

PARIS, May 30.—Epinard, not yet in his old form as shown by his defeat by Premontre at Longchamps yesterday, will be sent to England Monday for his seasoning on the English turf. Pierre Wertheimer, not chagrined by his horse's showing here, has merely decided to ship him to Newmarket immediately instead of waiting until June 10, as he originally intended. "We have no place at Maisons Laffitte to give the horse the real hard work he needs," said Wertheimer today. "He is always slow in getting into form and he is not yet ready. It was the same story last year, when the big fellow never rounded into top form until the end of June." Asked whether the plans for Epinard's trip to America had been changed, M. Wertheimer said: "It will be for the Americans to say after our English campaign whetherr they still want Epinard or not."

ANSBRO IS VICTOR IN 400-METER RUN

Ray Ansbro of Manhattan College, aided by a five-yard handicap, yesterday won the 400-meter handicap run in the Metropolitan A. A. U. track and field meet at Luna Park, Coney Island. The victor was hard pressed at the finish by Paprocki of the Loughlin Lyceum, but in the final strides Ansbro forged ahead and broke the tape a few inches in front of his closest rival.

Patsy Antonaui of the Paulist A. C. won the 3,000-meter run from the 175-yard mark. He scored by a comfortable margin over Hahn, who was second, and Fager, who finished third. It was a bad day for the scratch men, and Abel Kiviat, Patrick Kennedy and Andy Craw were unable to place.

In the second heat of the 100-meter dash Loren Murchison, national sprint champion, failed to place. The track was exceedingly soft, making it easy for a runner to sprain a tendon if he exerted himself, and Murchison finished in sixth place. The final heat was won by Max Schneider of Fordham University, who started from the six-yard mark.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 30.—Yale, Pennsylvania and Princeton for the East and Stanford and California for the West will fight it out tomorrow in the Harvard Stadium for the championship of the forty-eighth annual I. C. A. A. A. A. track and field meet. In the bitterly contested trials held this afternoon Yale qualified 14 men, Stanford 13, Pennsylvania and California, 10 each, and Princeton 9. The other qualifiers were Southern California with 8, Penn State and Harvard, 7 each; Dartmouth, 6; Cornell, 5; Boston College, Georgetown, and Johns Hopkins, 3 each; Syracuse, Columbia and Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 2 each; Amherst, Colgate and Williams, 1 each.

Yale, Pennsylvania and Stanford piled up a commanding lead in the early events today, only to have the Tigers and Golden Bears come with a rush in the twilight and put themselves where they must be seriously considered for the finals. In the last two events decided after the few thousands who braved a bitter wind and threatening clouds had gone home, the Tigers and Bears qualified three men each and made it plain that they intended to be in at the kill tomorrow.

The case of Walter Christie's California athletes, the defending champions and three-time winners of the title, does not appear to be particularly promising, despite the fact that they were among the heavy qualifiers. Most of the wearers of the Gold and Blue who came through will find themselves opposed to their own team mates in the finals, which is a poor way to pile up points in any meet.

Stamford Has Strong Team.

The Princeton and Pennsylvania qualifiers were better scattered, but those best informed were of the opinion tonight that the ultimate victor would be either the squad from New Haven or the lads from Palo Alto. The Stanford team came through in great shape this afternoon and if the blue wins tomorrow and brings the title back East, it is sure to know that it has been in a battle.

None of the New York colleges figured prominently. With Farrell of Fordham out, a crippled Columbia team and a small entry from N. Y. U. were left to carry the hopes of the metropolitan district. Columbia qualified two men, one in the 220-yard dash and one in the 440, but N. Y. U. failed to reach the finals.

With the wind blowing directly across his course, Billy Comins of Yale, defending champion, set a new intercollegiate meet record when he leaped 24 feet 5 5-16 inches in the running broad jump. The former I. C. A. A. A. A. record was established back in 1899 by A. C. Kraenzlein of Pennsylvania in a meet held in New York City.

Six Beat Discus Mark.

Another intercollegiate meet mark fell in the discus throw when Arthur of Stanford got away a throw of 154 feet 8½ inches. Arthur was hard pressed by his team mate, Glenn Hartranft, who also bettered the former mark of 140 feet ½ inch, which he set himself in last year's meet. All of the six men who qualified bettered the former mark. Besides Arthur and Hartranft, Houser of the University of Southern California and Francis, Lang and Neufeld qualified. The low mark among the sextet was 141 feet 3¾ inches, made by Francis.

The discus was the only event that the high wind favored, and after the event Gustavus T. Kirby, referee of the meet, said that it was doubtful if the new record would stand, but the final decision would rest with the Executive Committee.

Yale, one of the hopes of the East, began to show strength as soon as the meet was under way. Norton took his heat in the hundred and Bill Comins also got inside the charmed circle by running third to Russell of Cornell in his. Harvard drew its first blood when "Soapy" Watters, the Winchester whirlwind, ran a sparkling race in the second heat of the 800. Princeton, the third member of the Big Three, was slower to start than either of its rivals, and did not qualify a man until George Scattergood romped home first in his heat in the 120-yard hurdles, which came third among the track events. Scattergood made it a double by also qualifying in the low hurdles.

NEW ROCHELLE H. S. TAKES ROWING CUP

N. Y. A. C. CREW WINS TWICE

Beats New Rochelle R. C. and Columbia Freshmen, Then Conquers Columbia Third Varsity.

The well-trained and smoothly working eight-oared crew of the New Rochelle High School swept to a three-length victory over the Stuyvesant High School crew on the Harlem River yesterday in the one-mile interscholastic race held as part of the annual regatta of the New York Rowing Association. A length behind Stuyvesant came the De Witt Clinton boat. The winners' time was 4:45.

The New Rochelle oarsmen by their victory yesterday came into permanent possession of the trophy donated by the Lone Star Boat Club in honor of the late Samuel A. Cramer, who did much to foster interscholastic rowing in the metropolitan district. New Rochelle won a leg on the trophy in 1921 and another last year, while in 1922 Stuyvesant was the winner.

The New Rochelle schoolboy eight forged into a half length lead after about 600 yards and gradually increased it until the finish line at Washington Bridge was reached, when two lengths of open water separated them from Stuyvesant.

The rugged junior oarsmen of the New York A. C. proved their stamina and endurance when they rowed to victory in two events, first in the junior eight-oared shell race, in which they defeated the crew of the New Rochelle Rowing Club and the Columbia freshman eight, and again in the special match race over a mile and a quarter course when they beat the Columbia third varsity by three-quarters of a length.

Edward W. Fiebleman, former Harvard University star, reached the final round of the Eastern New York State lawn tennis championship at the Amackassin Club in Yonkers yesterday when he defeated Armand L. Bruneau of the Terrace-Kings County Tennis Club, in one of the most bitterly fought matches of the tournament. The score was 6—4, 4—6, 11—9. In the morning, Bruneau had gained his semi-final bracket by defeating F. Smith, former Dartmouth College player, in the fourth round. This match was begun on Wednesday and was stopped by rain in the second set with Smith leading at 7—5, 7—all. Bruneau pulled out the second set at 10—8 and then went on to take the third and deciding chapter at 8—6. All together, Bruneau played fifty-eight games during the day, and it was his tired condition as much as anything else that cost him the match against Fiebleman.

The summaries:

Fourth Round—Armand L. Bruneau defeated F. Smith, 5—7, 10—8, 8—6; Elliott H. Binzen defeated James D. Ewing, 10—8, 6—2.

HAWKINS IS WINNER IN OLYMPIC TRYOUT

Central Natator Performs Striking Back-Stroke Feat From 500 Yards Upward.

John Hawkins of Princeton scored a clean-cut victory in the metropolitan A. A. U. Olympic 1,500-meter try-out, free-style swimming in the 33 1-3-yard pool of the Washington Baths at Coney Island yesterday afternoon.

Thrashing his way through bitterly cold water, 52 degrees in temperature, Hawkins covered the distance in 22:44 2-5 and led home by more than one lap of the pool his nearest opponent, Edward Keating of the Boys' Club, holder of the national ten-mile championship. The latter's time was 23:14 4-5. Leo Giebel of the New York A. C., was third in 23:39 3-5.

Through his victory Hawkins earned the right to compete in the final Olympic qualifying tests at Indianapolis. Eleven candidates reported to the referee for the swim and it was decided to run the event in two heats of six and five men respectively, dispensing with a final by timing all contestants individually.

Hawkins, Keating, Giebel, Joseph Farley of the New York A. C.; Arthur Hastings of the Brooklyn Central S. C. and George Fissler of the Boys' Club, were sent off in the first heat. With the exception of Fissler, forced by the cold water to retire at 500 yards, the foregoing men all beat the time of the winner of the second heat. William Sadlo of the Wallkyll Club took the latter in 25:24 4-5, while Hastings, last in the first heat, returned 24:59 4-5.

A remarkable feature of the slower heat was the performance of Robert Hosie of the Central A. C., who swam the back stroke all the way and made striking time for this style of swimming. His figures for the standard distances from 500 yards upward were claimed as world's records, as none are listed for these distances at present. They are as follows: 500 yards, 7:43 2-5; 880 yards, 13:59 2-5; 1,000 yards, 16:06 2-5; 1,320 yards (three-quarter mile), 21:35 1-5; 1,500 yards, 24:46 2-5; 1,500 meters, 27:09 1-5.

POLITICAL LEADERSHIP.

The flood of complaint and reproach directed against Republican Senators who refused to support the President against the Bonus bill continues to mount. In Kansas it threatens seriously to embarrass, if not to overwhelm, Senator CAPPER. So marked has been in Connecticut the resentment at the course of her two Senators that one of them has been compelled to take notice of the protest. Senator MCLEAN has written a letter in which he denies that his vote to override the veto implied any hostility to the President, and asserts that he would "gladly resign" if by so doing he could insure the election of Mr. COOLIDGE this year. It is plain that several other Republican Senators are finding themselves in a similarly awkward situation.

All this is, of course, after the event. But it should have been foreseen in advance of it. The Senators ought to have known beforehand what would surely be the political consequences of their failure to stand by the President. And Mr. COOLIDGE, on his side, should have been able to bring to bear betimes a great party pressure on Senators who were not fully persuaded in their own minds. This is the feeling of those who are disappointed that the President did not, at that acute juncture in his own political fortunes and in the well-being of the country, seem to exert the full power which was rightfully his both as Chief Executive and leader of the Republican Party.

This, we presume, is what Senator GLASS had in mind when he said that if he were President and his leadership were rejected in a crisis of that kind, he would resign. As we said last Wednesday in our remarks on the speech of Mr. GLASS in Philadelphia, it is probable that he meant the chief emphasis to be upon a vigorous maintenance of the authority of the President. His phrase about resigning got more notice in the press than did his words about the duty of leadership. And such evidence as we have in the cases of Senator MCLEAN and Senator CAPPER will tend to confirm the view of those who believe that the President, if he had early enough and accurately enough measured the contest upon which he was entering, and had marshaled all the forces of the Republican organization at his command, might have saved the country from the bonus and his own leadership from an unfortunate discrediting.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

Mr. JOHN T. ADAMS, Chairman of the National Republican Committee, still sits at the helm of things and emits sailing directions. One almost wonders if he will ever consent to be supplanted; if he won't try to constitute himself Permanent National Chairman. At present he and his committee, the moldiness of 1920 thick upon them, are writing the Cleveland platform. That will be something of a task. Mr. ADAMS has collected "the general consensus of opinion" as to the resolutions highly to be resolved in June.

"Lord SANDWICH and I have been dead for two years," said Lord CHESTERFIELD; "only nobody has found it out." Our bustling Iowa friend should ponder that saying. Mr. COOLIDGE has been reported to favor a short platform. Mr. ADAMS estimates that the Committee on Resolutions will not be able to express its views in less than four thousand words. There is a sort of impression that Mr. COOLIDGE, humble as is his post compared with that soon to be vacated by Mr. ADAMS, may not be without influence on the document to be drawn up at Cleveland. What can the platform say? How can there be any platform? Mr. COOLIDGE'S cardinal policies have been enthusiastically kicked in the head by the Republicans in Congress. Now these gentlemen hope to save their own bacon by clinging to him.

Either the Congress or the President was right. They can't both be right. To praise one is to dispraise the other. If there must be a platform, it should be cut short. The "pointing with pride," usually a little ludicrous, would be more than that this year. In 1922 the Republicans "pointed with pride" to the Washington conference. The election returns didn't indicate that any votes had been achieved by that. Since then the scandal-mill has run full time and Congress has played its own hand, taking a positive pleasure in opposing and battling the President.

Whatever regiments of words may be assembled in the report of the Committee on Resolutions, the fact which no words can change stands out. Judged by its actions and inactions, the Republican Party in Congress has been a failure. The same thing is true of the Democratic Party in Congress, but that will be treated more charitably. It was not technically "in power"—if any party is "in power" and if government by parties hasn't been temporarily suspended. The strength of Mr. COOLIDGE is personal. He is known to be a painstaking and honest man, opposed by a morally dishonest Congress, swapping votes at Washington for votes in the district and the State, practically bribing classes of voters. What ingenuity of casuists and wordweavers can affect the strong public sense of the realities of the case? CALVIN COOLIDGE has been faithful to the interests of the whole people. Most Republicans and most Democrats in Congress have been unfaithful. It remains to be seen how far the popular sense of justice and fair play will be able to exert itself effectively in circumstances so unusual.

MACDONALD ON PROBATION.

Mr. ASQUITH had it in his power on Thursday to pronounce the doom of the Labor Government. Instead he handed down a suspended sentence. The vote of censure was defeated, but the issue, according to Mr. ASQUITH, remains open. How will the Labor Government make use of its respite? Probably it will buckle down to the task of developing a much better considered policy of unemployment relief than it has as yet produced. If there is one subject on which Labor might be expected to present a carefully thought-out program, it would be unemployment. But the Labor Government's record has been poor. Some weeks ago it was compelled to adopt a Liberal substitute for its own measure dealing with Glasgow rents. More recently it brought forward a proposal for lowering the unemployment age, as a qualification for doles, to 14 years, only to have it promptly punctured.

Obviously the Labor Government has much to learn about official technique. Mr. MACDONALD had occasion recently to warn some of his more ardent followers against the perils of "book-socialism." Now he admits to the Commons that the Government itself had sinned in that respect:

> In regard to our pledges and their fulfillment, why should I not confess we were a little innocent in this matter? Things which seemed very simple to carry out when we were without experience became very complicated and difficult when we became members of a Cabinet responsible for them.

But Mr. MACDONALD had something more than apology for his mistakes. Completely effective was his retort to the taunt that he was so absorbed with the big questions of foreign policy that he found no time or interest for the unemployed at home. A settlement of the general European difficulty would go far toward reducing unemployment at home. Such a reply could not have been challenged either by the Liberals or the Conservatives who through the mouth of LLOYD GEORGE, BONAR LAW and BALDWIN have popularized the argument that British trade and British unemployment demand a solution of the reparations problem. Non-Labor Prime Ministers have referred to Britain's unemployed as Britain's own "devastated regions."

Actually, unemployment in England has been declining. A fortnight ago the number of men out of work was reported as nearly 260,000 less than at the beginning of the year. And though Mr. MACDONALD cannot claim sole or major credit for a general lift in the industrial situation, it would be odd on the other hand if his Government were to fall on that issue in the face of a steadily improving situation.

WHAT OF JUNE?

On the threshold of June the weather is a topic to which a drenched and low-spirited community cannot be indifferent this year. Are we to have a sequence of three rainy months, to be followed by a torrid July? During April and May Jupiter Pluvius has hardly taken a day off. Mr. SCARR, the Government oracle, has hung out the sign "Fair Weather," only to be confounded by the event. Weather prognosticators have a way of proving that what appears to be a wet season is really drier than usual. It may rain every other day, but they point triumphantly to the record in inches. In so many years the measured fall was greater, and there you are! All of us decline the argument, because we have contracted paralysis of the forearm by holding up umbrellas day in and day out.

In this Spring of 1924, records of measured rainfall are statistically misleading. April and May have been too wet to admit of a controversy with a meteorological sharp. Even the robins, apoplectic with worms plucked from the grass, have had enough of Spring. In the submerged woods the frogs have ceased to jubilate: even a frog likes to hop about on dry land for a change. As for newspaper readers, they are tired of such headlines as "The Potomac Goes on a Rampage Again." There is no use in talking about the measured rainfall when you have seen in print the statement that "the Shenandoah is thirty feet above normal and still rising," or "The flats between Hornell and "Canisteo, a distance of four miles, "are completely covered. The rain "has not ceased"; or such an item as this: "DANIEL WILLARD, President "of the Baltimore & Ohio, is marooned "at Hancock."

Is this kind of thing to go on during June? Even the Battery seer must be shy of committing himself. There have been gleams of sunshine and patches of blue in April and May, but who remembers them, except profiteering umbrella makers? It has been a good season for grass, but a sad one for garden crops. Seeds have rotted in the ground. Apple blossoms were three weeks late. June should open with a glory of rambler rosebuds, but will not this year. The misguided hatters started a propaganda for the calling in of derbies and fedoras on May 15, but the edict was answered with cloudbursts. One enterprising florist, adapting himself to the inevitable, changed his sign to "Say it with ferns." A great season for ferns! The poetry of Spring has been swept away by rainwater. How will it be with June? Are the National Conventions to be held in a deluge? A rainy June after a weeping April and a soaked May would be the last straw on the back of the optimist.

MISPLACED LAUGHTER.

"There was, of course," wrote a dramatic critic reviewing a performance on the London stage, "a good deal of misplaced laughter." Theatregoers in New York know the kind of thing meant. It is not the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind, but outbursts of hilarity in the audience at inappropriate moments. The piece may go on for an act or two as a side-splitting comedy, and then the attempt be made to introduce a bit of pathos. But there are always some people present to think that this only makes the joke more exquisite, and to keep on laughing while others are getting out their handkerchiefs. Or it may be that an actor who has made his reputation as a comedian essays a serious impersonation. He is sure to be interrupted in his most tragic moments by laughs, or at least giggles, for old acquaintance' sake, or on the theory that his grave face only makes the fooling more subtle.

The presentation of "Saint Joan" in this city has been regularly marred by untimely laughter among the spectators. They seem to fear lest one of SHAW'S hidden jests or sly allusions should get by them without recognition. The assumption appears to be that the playwright as a famous humorist must be intending something comic even when he appears to be dropping into moving sentiment. It would be invidious and also needless to mention other instances. The phenomenon itself of misplaced laughter is familiar to every one who frequents the theatre. Whether it arises from ignorance, dullness, a hysterical state of overwrought nerves, or what not, it represents a maladjustment between actors and auditors which must be a constant source of irritation to the former. That it also is highly exasperating to the more intelligent and perceptive among the audience is another reason why a remedy would be welcomed if it could only be found. But short of special training for theatregoers, or printed directions on the program when not to laugh, the case seems pretty hopeless.

FOR CHILDREN'S VACATIONS.

A cold and backward Spring does not lessen the soundness of the appeal by the Children's Aid Society for $100,000 to finance its Summer work. Preparedness is always timely, and the first hot wave will again bring home sharply the necessity of getting sick and ailing children out of the city for as long a time as possible. This the Children's Aid Society has been doing for fifty years, and it expects in the coming season to provide vacations for more even than last year. The society chooses out those in greatest need of a change and brings them back to their homes with renewed health and spirits.

New Yorkers, going to and fro in subways or in the city streets, seem to forget that there is any world other than the one of stone and din and rush and smells in which they move. Even those who occasionally visit the suburbs are sometimes surprised to see that such things as full-leaved trees and deep meadows still exist. They think of the outdoors only in terms of the city's parks of stunted growth. And even the native Long Islander is amazed at the "mountains" of upper Westchester.

Even a short Summer vacation in the country is a blessing to the city's youngsters. A real diamond for baseball, with a field beside it; water that is clean and accessible, instead of the filthy and hazardous waterfronts of the Hudson and East Rivers; and, above all, air and sunshine and freedom, with plenty of nourishing food—these are some of the things to be had in the Summer camps of the Children's Aid Society. Then there are the countless discoveries to be made—where real milk comes from, and who's who in the farmyard, with the many different kinds of birds to be seen.

Every means of getting children into the country who otherwise would be condemned to a Summer on the city's pavements should be encouraged. It brings happiness and health to countless families and builds better citizens.

THE RHEIMS RESTORATION.

The Rheims Cathedral has been called by a great authority on Gothic art "the crowning manifestation of a crowning civilization," a structure without a fault in its design, a church that would have been the most complete, as it was the most perfect, of the architectural expressions of Christianity — an "all-embracing competence." There are thousands who knew it for what it was before the most recent and barbaric of disasters touched it with an implacable hand and destroyed some of the exquisite beauty of this crowning glory "where all was glorious." Their memories have restored it for themselves and will keep it against obliteration, except as these memories fade. For millions, however, in the succeeding generations no such restoration is possible. The marred features of the cathedral and its broken and decaying body would have spoken father of the wickedness that wrought this indignity and iniquity.

It is thus a wonderful privilege that has come to a man of this generation to provide for such a restoration of the cathedral as will make it available permanently as a place of worship, by replacing the roof consumed by fire during the bombardment, and as will prevent further decay of the walls and carvings whose flakings made a "dreary rain on blood-stained "pavements where a hundred kings "have trod." It is a tribute to his broad-mindedness as well as to his imaginative generosity that he should have asked of France permission not only to make a very practical restoration in a city that was once the very heart of France, the place of the coronation of kings and the sitting of Church councils, but also to show his feeling for the French people of today whose proud courage and fine qualities he admires.

There was a suggestion made while the scars were still fresh at Rheims and the war was still on that no "restoration" should ever be attempted, that nothing should be done in the way of imitations to mock the vanished glory of the cathedral, but that it should stand as a "record of an indelible crime." A church should, however, be the last of all buildings of Christian rearing in which to cherish and communicate such a memory. What Mr. ROCKEFELLER has done is to help extend its life as a great cathedral and preserve all the beauty that is left to it of the work of its famed architect who wrought in godly fear and so built the "noblest church in Christendom."

This nobly conceived and practically planned gift, which has extended itself to include the repairing and reconditioning of certain other monuments of France, is not the gift of Mr. ROCKEFELLER alone. It is the gift of all Americans who join him in the lofty sentiment which it expresses. Announced as it was on our Memorial Day, it becomes the "crowning manifestation" of our memory of those who fought in France, and especially of those whose bodies lie in France, none far from this enduring shrine.

AN ARCHITECT OF THE ENTENTE.

Rarely have two brothers served their country with such distinction as PAUL and JULES CAMBON. Ambassadors of France both, PAUL, whose death was announced two days ago, was one of the principal architects of the "Entente Cordiale" which bound France and Britain together in the years prior to the war. His younger brother, JULES, after serving as Ambassador in Washington, was transferred to Berlin in 1902, to remain there until August, 1914, doing what he could to stave off the war which he, more clearly perhaps than most of his countrymen, saw to be inevitable.

Of the two, PAUL was thrown into greater events throughout a longer period. When he was transferred to the Court of St. James's from Madrid in 1898, the relations of Britain and France were strained owing to the conflict of their African policies. Lord SALISBURY, then Prime Minister, found CAMBON easier to deal with than his predecessor, and during the succeeding years the new Ambassador was able to do much to dispel the distrust that had alienated the two countries. In particular after the accession of King EDWARD, M. CAMBON rendered invaluable services to the cause of Anglo-French cooperation. The celebrated visit of the King to Paris in 1903 materially improved the relations between the two countries, and it was followed shortly thereafter by a convention negotiated by CAMBON to dispose of numerous problems.

It was in 1912 that Ambassador CAMBON did what was probably his greatest work. At that time there was uneasiness in the Chancelleries of Europe about a possible world war. France and England, in particular, were disturbed, and had been consulting about possible eventualities. In October CAMBON and Sir EDWARD GREY exchanged notes on the nature of their understanding, and it was agreed that "if either Government had grave rea-"son to expect an unprovoked attack "by a third Power, or something that "threatened the general peace, it "should immediately discuss with the "other whether both Governments "should act together to prevent ag-"gression and to preserve peace, and, "if so, what measures they would be "prepared to take in common." Although this ostensibly left each Government with a free hand, from that time forth Great Britain was considered as pledged to support France in the event of a German war.

It is idle to speculate on the course which history might have taken had France sent to London an Ambassador less sympathetic to the English than PAUL CAMBON. Certain it is, however, that the Entente between France and England was made durable largely on account of his patient building. King GEORGE'S celebrated remark to our Ambassador when war was declared, "My God, Mr. PAGE, what else could we do?" was in part a recognition of the inevitable trend of events. But it also was an acknowledgment of England's obligations under the Entente Cordiale, for which M. CAMBON had labored with final success.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Why Hoffman Escapes the Chair.

Current comment on the verdict of second-degree murder against the man charged with the killing of Mrs. BAUER is for the most part expressive of dissatisfaction in one or another form. The comparatively few people who understand the distinctions made by the law in regard to the taking of human life admit that the jurors did their duty intelligently, acted on the law as defined by the Judge, and reached what was, for them, the right decision. Others see the death of Mrs. BAUER as about the most atrocious murder that could be committed, and they cannot see why, if HOFFMAN was guilty, he should not suffer the extreme penalty. Any intermediate sentence seems to them both absurd and outrageous.

They hesitate about the repetition of this opinion only when their attention is called to the fact that nobody saw HOFFMAN kill Mrs. BAUER—that the evidence against him was wholly circumstantial, and, if pressed, most of them will admit that they would not send a man to the chair on evidence of that kind.

In this they reveal that they share the strong, but ill-supported, belief in the inferiority of circumstantial evidence to that of eyewitnesses. Yet they know well enough that even honest eyewitnesses far from always "get things straight," and very often get them very crooked. This is much more than a general impression; it is a fact that has been proved again and again in the psychological laboratories and hardly less conclusively by the common experiences of everyday life.

There is in both kinds of evidence an element of risk, but in the case of eyewitnesses there are two risks—they may be dishonest or they may be mistaken—while in circumstantial evidence there is only one danger, that of misinterpretation of the known facts. As between the two uncertainties there is little choice, and the expectation of absolute certainty is one nearly or quite hopeless.

A Complaint Surely Exaggerated.

One of THE TIMES'S correspondents complained this week at what he called the impossibility at present for those out of work to get employment except through the agencies, and at the consequent loss of a week's pay, taken as a fee. Whether or not that impossibility is real in some lines, it certainly is not true in all, or even in most of them, as is shown daily by the great number of advertisements printed in the papers, as well by those seeking employment as by those offering it.

These advertisers are not spending their money in a way which experience has proved useless. As for the agencies, they are of various qualities as respects honesty and efficiency, but it is to be inferred from their number, and from the length of time during which the better ones continue business, that they serve a useful purpose. So intense is the competition between the many agencies that it must be difficult for any of them to charge more for the service they render than it is worth.

Seekers for employment who would escape payment of a fee to the agencies should devote more time than they do to the wording of their advertisements. By putting in them something of originality, something that attracts attention, something more informative than are the stereotyped and perfunctory forms, they can increase their chances of getting the sort of answers they desire.

This Proves Them Well Taught.

With Columbia's alumni following so soon and closely the good example set by those of Princeton, in their effort to have this year's commencement gatherings and class celebrations marked by strict observance of Federal and State laws with respect to alcoholic beverages, the other colleges hardly can fail to take like action.

These appeals are an encouraging indication of a growth, or a new or stronger realization, among people of education, that, regardless of whether they like or dislike prohibition, it is their duty to obey the law and help in its enforcement.

One could wish that in drafting their resolution the Columbia alumni had not used so often the phrase "on university property," for that will, or may, be taken as hinting that indulgence elsewhere is less reprehensible. Of course it is nothing of the kind. No matter where he is, or when, the collegian is under an equal obligation to guard the honor of his Alma Mater by showing by his conduct everywhere that she taught efficiently the respect for law which is a much more important thing than the earning of "counts" in arts, sciences or ologies.

In every instance, as yet, the graduates have responded promptly and emphatically when asked to bring no liquor to commencement and not to countenance its bringing by others. That cannot fail to have an excellent influence on the undergraduates, and if each alumnus can lay his hand on his aging heart and proclaim that never, never, never has he, or will he, share the bootlegger's turpitude by buying his wares and so making his crimes profitable, then the influence will be still more excellent.

A Baronet's Feelings Are Hurt.

Lieut. Col. Sir BRODRICK HARTWELL is a sensitive man and he has been grieved deeply at having had his business called a "blot" on England's honor by no less person than England's Prime Minister in no less public place than the House of Commons. The Baronet denies that he is either a smuggler or a bootlegger.

All he does, he indignantly declares, is to load ships with whisky, rum, gin, brandy and the slightly less strong waters, and carry them to a point twenty miles off the American coast. That being the high sea, no law is broken, and none is broken—by him—when mysterious persons appear there, buy his wares and sail away to do with them what concerns him not.

Any lawyer, speaking as such, will say that Sir BRODRICK'S defense is perfect; and any lawyer, speaking as a man decent either in reality or pretense, will say that the defense is worthy only of a greedy and sordid wretch who, for profits, will peril the friendships of his country and has no better notion of moral obligation than that of keeping out of jail by taking advantage of legal technicalities.

His partners in his sorry trade are of like quality, and Mr. MACDONALD exactly, though mildly, characterized them all when he called them "blots."

POLLUTION OF THE AIR.

Engineer Sees Menace to New York From Fuel Oil and Soft Coal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The happiness, pleasure and health to be had from clear skies, sunny days, star-bright nights and a wealth of sweet life-giving air are without equal. The unhappiness, mental depression and sickness caused by noisome and murky atmospheres that shut out sunlight cannot be overestimated.

Our city formerly was renowned for its pure and healthful atmosphere. Today a change has come and the brilliant days that were the rule are now the exceptions. If the burning of soft coal and fuel oil is not stopped, the pollution of the atmosphere will become rapidly greater until, as in Pittsburgh, a clear sky will be seen about once a month. It will soon become necessary to escape from the atmosphere of our city unless its pollution is prevented.

Smoke from soft coal and fuel oil contains heavy gases of sulphur and tends to diffuse downward instead of upward as with smoke from hard coal. Fuel oil smoke issuing from a high chimney can be seen to fall. Streets within a half mile of the Chelsea piers are frequently deluged with fuel oil smoke from the ships, so that one might assume an oil conflagration to be in progress.

The use of fuel oil is not confined to large buildings having high stacks. Three-story residences, whose chimneys are within fifty feet of the windows of my apartment, belch forth the same sulphurous yellow smoke. The wide possible use of fuel oil indicates the depths of atmospheric gloom to which we may descend.

Sulphur, contained in soft coal and cheap fuel oils, forms an acid when diffused into the atmosphere. This acid is the main cause of the rusting and disintegration of iron and steel, causing general loss and expense that greatly overbalance the gains of the few who use cheap fuels.

The right to have and breathe pure air is so necessary to health and happiness that it should be carefully guarded. Smoke conditions in our city indicate that neither those in authority nor the citizens recognize the right or realize the dangers.

THEODORE R. N. GERDES, M. E.

"Telephoto."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While Professor D. C. MacIntosh's suggestion that the word "telephine" is a "more correct and less awkward name than 'picture telephone' for the new invention" may be a good one, still I think it is open to criticism. The root of the Greek verb phaino is phan, which syllable one sees in the word "diaphanous." And so, had Professor MacIntosh been a little more fundamental, he might have suggested "telephan."

I have, however, a rival suggestion to make. In these days the word "photograph" is frequently colloquialized into "photo," just as "telephone" is frequently colloquially called "phone." As "photo" comes from the Greek word meaning "light" and "tele" from a word meaning "distance" or "end," why would not "telephoto" best describe a picture sent a long distance over a wire?

A Correction.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your summary of my commencement address at the General Theological Seminary yesterday you attribute to me, in quotation marks, the words: "There is not much use in intellectual fighting for orthodoxy." Neither these words nor any other words of similar meaning occur in the address, and, if regarded as a summary of what I did say, these words misrepresent what I said and what I believe.

W. ROMAINE NEWBOLD.

A MODERN VIEW.

There is a God, somewhere, who's not a cop,
Walking a beat; whose voice is not Vox Pop,
Clamoring for this or that inane reform;
A God who does not loose the vengeful storm,
And who abhors
All foolish human wars.

He does not sit upon a throne of white,
Condemning hapless mortals in His might;
He does not harken to the tiresome plaints
Of lean, dour-visaged, snowy-whiskered saints,
Nor care for sycophantic seraphim
Who twang their harps at Him.

Men are but ants that crawl upon a clod,
Within the sight of such a God:
Yet such a God painstakingly would steal
Aside to keep from crushing with His heel
Such ants, e'en though a thousand worlds, aghast,
Paused in their cosmic courses while He passed.

To such a God, somewhere,
I make my morning prayer;
Not in abject adulation,
Nor genuflecting supplication,
But in sincere, straightforward gratitude
For that the world, and all therein, is good.

PARKING CARS ON BROADWAY

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial article on "The Cruising-Taxi Nuisance" in today's issue you contend that the 15,000 taxis operating in the city are not too many, but agree with the view that parking of private cars should not be permitted along Broadway.

Even though the present number of taxis may not be in excess of the legitimate demand under present conditions, they do form a noticeable factor in increasing traffic congestion, and probably you would admit that a change in present conditions which might increase the demand for taxis would not be desirable. It seems to me that the prohibition of parking which you advocate would be unfortunate for this and other reasons.

A very large proportion of the cars parked at a given moment along Broadway, I believe, consists of cars parked for a few minutes while the owners are transacting some business. I have frequently used my car in this way, and when I have found no parking space available on the block where I wished to stop I have usually driven around the block and found a space on my return. In other words, one or more of the parked cars had moved on while I was making the circuit of the block.

If this condition is as general as my observation indicates, it is apparent that a very large number of car owners must avail themselves of the Broadway parking privilege in the course of a day. Now, what will these people do if not allowed to stop on Broadway for even a few minutes? Very few of them will be able to park near Broadway on the cross streets, because the space on these is pretty well taken up by parked cars even now, and my opinion is that the average length of stay of cars parked on the side streets is much longer than it is on Broadway. What I would do, and what I feel sure many other car owners would do, if not allowed to park on Broadway, even for a few moments, is to take a taxi whenever it was necessary to stop for a short call on Broadway.

Since the principal object, as I understand it, of the proposed prohibition of parking is to facilitate automobile traffic—that is, to promote the convenience of those who wish to get the full use of their cars—I do not see how forcing them to use taxis would help.

There seems to be a tendency in recent suggestions for traffic improvement to concentrate attention on the moving phase of traffic. I would like to point out that very few persons use their cars simply to ride up and down and keep moving. They want to go from some place to some other place, usually to a number of other places, in the course of a day. It is just as necessary to their convenience to be able to stop at or near these places as it is to be able to reach them in a reasonable time. Therefore, I think the preservation of parking privileges along the curb, with reasonable restrictions — dependent on locality and on the time of day—as to length of stop, is quite as important as is the preservation of a clear field for moving traffic.

I cannot see why the business men located on Broadway should desire to have parking privileges abolished. While many persons doing business with them would, as I have said, take taxis, many others would transfer their business to other localities, where they could park, and the tenants of shops and offices on Broadway would suffer.

The Glory of the Serbs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with pleasure and interest the poem of Marion Couthouy Smith, glorifying the Serbs in Yugoslavia. It is true that the "Serbs are proud among proud races," that "they have reached the trail of their lost glory," and that "they are strong among strong races," as the author of the poem says. My hat is off to the stoicism with which the Serbs endured the invasion of the armies occupying their homes during the World War. But is not this "hard won crown" of the Serbs made up of many unwilling subjects? Is not this "crown" won as a result of national calamity to the Croats, Slovenes, Macedonians, Bosnians and Montenegrins?

It is as noble for a human being to sacrifice himself for an ideal, to defend his home and his rights and to lay down his life for a great cause, as it is equally base and ignoble to attack the human being's rights, tyrannize his conscience and destroy his ideals by force. These dominating Serbs in Yugoslavia, by means as yet undescribed in history, day by day subdue or put out of existence all the living souls in "false Yugoslavia" who are foreign to the Serbian race.

What has become of the little State of Montenegro, which was a haven of refuge to the Slavs and especially to the Serbs during five centuries of Turkish invasion of the Balkans? What has become of the culture of the Croats and Slovenes, who even during Austro-Hungarian dominion had their own national pride? What is becoming of Macedonia? And what about Bosnia and Herzegovina?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In today's TIMES there is the statement that "Mayo sees cancer gone in a few years," and I cannot let that go without remonstrance. It happened that I heard Dr. Charles H. Mayo speak last evening in the New York Academy of Medicine Buildings to a crowded meeting of the New York County Medical Society, and all the statements made there were sad and most discouraging.

There were four speakers and not one of them, including Dr. Mayo, said a word which would in any way warrant such a statement as quoted. As a doctor, caring for cancer in a hospital, said to me this morning, "the whole meeting was most pessimistic." All of the speakers seemed to agree that little had been accomplished by surgery or radium in the way of diminishing the steady rise of 2½ per cent. yearly in the mortality from cancer, and it was generally agreed that nothing was known as to the cause of the disease.

The recently formed "American Association for the Study and Cure of Cancer" is at work at the problem clinically, and hopes to show at its coming first annual meeting at Chicago that there are many who know that the proper dietary, hygienic and medicinal treatment of cancer can effect and has effected vastly more in the control of its mortality than has been accomplished by surgery and radiation or laboratory studies on lower animals.

I noticed in this morning's TIMES some very interesting data in connection with the food industry in the City of New York. As an old-time New Yorker I regret the passing of the familiar coffee-roasting smells and cannot help wishing that it were the slaughter houses that were moving to Long Island and New Jersey instead of the coffee and spice industries. I cannot understand why additional slaughter houses are still permitted on the island of Manhattan when they are so offensive to every one not connected with the business.

HOUSE DEVOTES DAY TO FARM RELIEF BILL

COOLIDGE URGES ACTION

Wants Reclamation Relief Assured —Compromise on McNary-Haugen Measure Discussed.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—As the House today moved a notch nearer a vote on the McNary-Haugen Farm Relief bill, uncertainty as to whether Congress will adjourn before the June political conventions continued.

Demands for favorable action on the measure or an acceptable substitute, reclamation relief, Muscle Shoals and the bill to abolish the Railroad Labor Board were reiterated, and various Representatives and Senators continued predictions that adjournment might be blocked, but the Republican leaders, particularly in the House, expressed confidence that developments next week would pave the way for adjournment by Saturday.

During the day Senator Borah, who has been insisting on the disposition of legislation designed to afford relief to settlers on reclamation projects, conferred with President Coolidge. Later word went out from the White House that the President hoped nothing would prevent action on the proposals now pending before the House Irrigation Committee which carry out the recommendations of Secretary Work's Fact-Finding Commission.

The House resumed consideration of the McNary-Haughen bill, with its supporters somewhat at sea as to what should be done should it meet defeat. Some said they believed a substitute should be presented, although there appeared to be a marked difference of opinion as to what sort of a compromise should be offered. Others held that rejection of the McNary-Haugen proposal would show the futility of attempting to get effective farm relief legislation through at this session and that Congress might as well adjourn. At the outset of today's session opponents of the McNary-Haugen bill attempted to obtain assurance that a vote would be deferred until next week. They argued that many members were absent and served notice that they would utilize every means to prevent action until the first of next week. Representative Longworth, the Republican leader, declined to promise that a vote would be postponed, although it appeared certain, on adjournment late today that consideration of the bill could not be completed tomorrow.

Only one-fourth of the measure's twenty-eight pages had been read and a number of controversial sections remain to be disposed of. Several dozen amendments were offered today, but only one, presented by Representative JOHN C. HOUSTON, Democrat, of Texas and designed to afford the same price increase benefits to producers of wheat and live stock as to producers of flour and meat products, was accepted.

Interchanges of views between Senators and Representatives as to the legislative program, particularly farm relief, continued, and while there seemed to be no agreement as to procedure if the McNary-Haugen bill is discarded, the view was general that Congress could, if it so desired, get results in the coming week.

Senator Borah stated after his talk with the President that he was convinced there were enough votes in House and Senate to force a showdown on farm and reclamation relief before final action on an adjournment resolution.

Representative Longworth, who intends to offer such a resolution, expressed confidence today on the floor that the adjournment program could be carried out. It is generally conceded that the fate of the resolution will rest with the Senate, as it will be possible to force it to a vote in the House, with leaders generally agreed that a majority would support it. It would be possible, however, they point out, for a Senate group to hold up action on the proposal and keep Congress in session.

NEW LOW DEATH RATE.

Was 9.2 Per 1,000 for United States and Canada for First Quarter of 1924

If statistics gathered by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and affecting 15,000,000 persons in average walks of life may be taken as an index, the death rate for the first quarter of 1924 in the United States and Canada has been the lowest ever recorded for the first three months in any year.

The deduction made by Dr. Louis I. Dublin, the company's statistician, is based upon the mortality among the company's industrial policy holders, comprising practically one-seventh of the combined populations of the two countries. In this urban industrial population the quarter's death rate was 9.2 per 1,000, aged one year and over, compared with a rate of 9.7 in the first quarter of 1923, which was the previous record first quarter for low mortality.

There has been marked improvement in mortality from diphtheria. Scarlet fever is running lower than for several years past. Influenza, which reached epidemic prevalence early in 1923, has not been at all important this year. Tuberculosis mortality again shows a marked decline. Mortality from diabetes dropped 23 per cent. compared with the first quarter of last year. "Each additional month," the bulletin said, "helps to confirm the impression that the growing use of insulin is an important factor in bringing this about."

For the first time since 1920 there was a drop in the mortality from alcoholism, amounting to about 17½ per cent.

V. EVERIT MACY RESIGNS.

WOMAN, 74, TOURS 8,000 MILES IN AUTO

RETURNS WITH DAUGHTER

Untired by Long Trip—Travelers From Salem, Ore., Praise New York Traffic Police.

Mrs. A. N. Gilbert of Salem, Ore., who made her first trip across the American continent behind an ox team when her father joined the rush of the Forty-niners, has just come back across the country on an 8,000-mile motor trip with her daughter, Mrs. B. O. Schucking, also of Salem. Mrs. Gilbert will celebrate her seventy-fifth birthday on the Fourth of July. She said yesterday she was not the least fatigued by her long automobile ride, which was made in six weeks.

Mrs. Schucking drove the car. She and her mother were without an escort on the entire journey. Not once did they meet with anything that caused them alarm.

"In Salem my friends warned me that traffic in New York City was terrible; that I would find driving very difficult, and that I would get into trouble if I didn't look out," said Mrs. Schucking, who was visiting at the home of her sister-in-law, Mrs. William Graf, 129 East Eighty-second Street, yesterday.

"On the contrary, I find New York City is the easiest city to drive in that I have ever visited. The traffic regulations are well-nigh perfect, and the traffic police are unusually kind and courteous."

So far from wearied were the mother and daughter by their 8,000-mile transcontinental tour that they have made side trips out of New York City almost daily since their arrival here a week ago. They have planned a trip to Briarcliff tomorrow before starting on Monday on their homeward journey via Boston, Buffalo, Toledo, Milwaukee, Omaha, Cheyenne, Yellowstone National Park and Boise.

Caught in Quarantines.

On their trip to New York Mrs. Gilbert and Mrs. Schucking were caught in the foot and mouth disease quarantines and fumigated sometimes as often as five times a day as they crossed one boundary line after another. In Georgia they narrowly escaped the hurricanes which swept that and other Southern States.

"At the California State line," said Mrs. Schucking, "the quarantine officers inspected every piece of our baggage. I didn't like to have my things undone because I didn't know just how I had packed them, and I protested.

"'Never mind, madam,' said the young quarantine officer, 'I'm married.'

She described the vast congregation of automobile travelers held up by quarantine officials who forced the travelers to give up all their uncooked food, including bottled milk, in many cases the only sustenance for infants; also all live animals.

"There was one woman," said Mrs. Schucking, "who was determined she would not give up a nice basket of eggs about to be seized. She built a fire in the open and cooked the eggs which she then was permitted to take across the line. At every quarantine station there were piles and piles of food that tourists had been compelled to abandon."

From Salem the route of Mrs. Schucking and her mother went through Sacramento, Fresno and Los Angeles to Phoenix, Ariz. Then they doubled back to make a tour of the Grand Canyon, and from there they went to Santa Fe. Before arriving at Albuquerque they stopped at Laguna, to make a side trip of about twenty-five miles to one of the primitive Indian reservations.

"We thought there would be lots of tourists when we got to the top of the mountain where this ancient tribe lived," said Mrs. Schucking, "but we were the only whites. The chief has never been down from the top of the mountain because of tribal superstitions. Only a few young Indians sent each year from the mountain to reservation schools can speak English. One of them returned as a runner to the chief for a year, and his selection falls upon the youth as a great honor."

El Paso, Dallas, New Orleans and Mobile were the next stops of the transcontinental motorists. In Mississippi a toll part the Salem license plate brought joy to the heart of a homesick Salemite who had lived a long time in Mobile. Mrs. Gilbert had been in the car when it was parked at a curb. The former Oregonian ran to the car, flung open the door and wrung both her hands, explaining to the astonished Mrs. Gilbert that he once lived in Salem and that she was the first person from that place he had seen since he left home.

Homesick Man Proposed.

His affection for the old home town was extended to include not only Mrs. Gilbert but her daughter, and he proposed marriage to Mrs. Schucking in the event her husband was not living.

"My husband is very much alive," said Mrs. Schucking.

"But he may be dead before you get home," said the Mobile admirer as he waved good-bye to the cross-country motorists.

Near Tallahassee, Fla., Mrs. Schucking was forced to change a flat tire. Presently a doctor came along in his automobile. He stopped and offered to change the deflated tire. The physician spied the Salem license plate.

"Do you know Dr. Carlton Smith of Salem?" he asked.

Mrs. Schucking and Mrs. Gilbert said they knew him well, and they then learned from the doctor that he and Dr. Smith were friends of twenty years.

"Further evidence of the smallness of the world," said Mrs. Schucking.

Mrs. Schucking said that their only trouble on the entire trip was with tires. They picked up lots of nails, but always their difficulties were minimized by fellow travelers who changed tires for the women.

When they were approaching El Paso the small feed pipe from the vacuum tank sprung a leak, which Mrs. Schucking mended with a piece of tape. That was the only repair on the whole trip. In New York City they took their car to a service station in the Bronx for an inspection. The only thing required by the car was to have the valves reground.

Mrs. Schucking said she and her mother often slept in their car. The chief item of expense was gasoline, which amounted to less than $75.

PARENTS HAVE PAPERS, BUT BABY MAY GO BACK

Father Appeals to Have Son Admitted With Mother From

A three-months-old baby has been held by the immigration authorities at Ellis Island since Tuesday because of the United States Supreme Court's recent decision in the Gottlieb case. The infant, which arrived with his mother on the Cunard liner Franconia, will have to be deported unless the appeal, taken by the baby's father, is granted.

Alfred Collumbine, the father, explained. He said he and his bride sailed from their home in Yorkshire, England, on April 21, 1923, a week after they were married. Collumbine is a machinist, and after his arrival here he obtained employment at the Carnegie Steel Company's plant in Youngstown, Ohio. Last September Collumbine and his wife received their first papers in the Mahoning County Court, Ohio.

Mrs. Collumbine sailed for home a month later and her son was born on Feb. 25 last.

Mrs. Collumbine booked passage on the Scythia, he said, which was to have sailed from Liverpool May 10. The sailing was cancelled and the passengers were transferred to the Franconia, which sailed a week later from Southampton.

"If the Scythia had sailed," said Collumbine, "my wife and baby would have arrived here long before the Gottleib decision was rendered and they would have been free to enter. As it is, they came just one day after the decision was announced."

He saw that deportation of his baby would mean deportation of his wife, and also that he would have to give up his position here and return to England. Columbine is staying in New York in order to see his wife and child every day. He will remain in, he said, until he has received definite word as to the outcome of the appeal.

38 FAIL IN LAW SCHOOL.

An announcement posted on the bulletin board at Kent Hall yesterday announced that thirty-eight students out of 140 of the senior class of Columbia Law School had failed to pass their final examination and would not be graduated next week. It was said to be unusual for such a large percentage of a senior class to fail.

Keen disappointment was clearly evident among those of the failures who crowded about the bulletin board. Some, confident of being graduated, had already registered to take the special Summer course as part of their preparation to pass the State bar examination. Included among the failures were fifteen graduates of Columbia, six from City College, two each from Yale, Harvard and Princeton. Most of those who failed will apply for re-examination in September, it was said.

TEARS OFF THE FLAG, BEATEN BY JANITOR

MEN FIGHT IN APARTMENT

Former Marine Insists on Right to Fly Ensign and Defends It With His Fists.

Carl S. Chace, who said he was a member of a family that had resided for many years in the Dorchester section of Boston, was held without bail in the Night Court last evening when Magistrate Thomas F. McAndrews found him guilty of tearing an American flag from a window on the eighth floor of the Palermo apartment house, which he owns, at 125 East Fifty-seventh Street.

Mr. Chace, who appeared in court with a discolored right eye and bruised nose and jaw, was arraigned on a disorderly conduct charge made by an ex-marine, Walter Walti, the janitor of his apartment house. In holding him without bail for sentence on Monday night, the Court ordered a probation officer to investigate his previous actions.

The Magistrate's decision came after a two-and-a-half-hour hearing in which Mr. Chase, his brother Franklin M. Chace, and Dr. George M. Goodwin, all tenants in the apartment house, testified that the flag flown from the janitor's apartment on the eighth floor was dirty and delapidated and did not harmonize with the appearance of the building.

Walti was corroborated by his brother, Otto, who gave his testimony in German. Policeman Elias G. Kean of the East Fifty-first Street Station, who arrested Mr. Chace, said when he was called to the apartment after the owner of the house and the janitor had engaged in an altercation, he found the flag wound around the end of its pole in a corner of the apartment and that it had the appearance of having been torn.

The janitor said Mr. Chace ordered him to take down the flag which he had put out in honor of Decoration Day at 11 A. M., and when the ex-marine refused to do so, Mr. Chace tore it again down the flag before the janitor flag to the pole and two hours later Mr. Chace entered the apartment, locked the door behind him and ripped down the flag again before the janitor had kicked down the door, and they engaged in a fist fight in which Mr. Chace was beaten.

Dr. Goodwin was recalled to the stand after he had testified that the flag was soiled, and when he was asked by the Magistrate if he could observe its soiled condition from the sidewalk, he admitted that he could not.

"Why did you pull down the flag?" asked the Magistrate when the prisoner was testifying.

"Well, I didn't want that kind of a flag on the building," he said.

Mr. Chace also admitted that he never had a flag flown from the building since he moved into it four years ago from Boston.

When the Magistrate asked, "You don't believe in having a flag flown from the building?" the prisoner answered: "Well, I've never had a flag flown."

"This is Decoration Day," the Magistrate said. "I want you to understand that there are thousands in America who still believe in patriotism and that feel this is the only way to show their respect for the Americans who fell in the war."

LAGUARDIA ASSAILS JUDGE IN JOYCE CASE

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30. — Federal Judge George English of the Southern District of New York was the object of a bitter attack in the House today by Representative LaGuardia, Republican, of New York City.

Mr. LaGuardia condemned Judge English because of his failure to imprison Henry L. Joyce, marine manager of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, who is alleged to have defrauded the Government of more than $1,000,000. Judge English's action in limiting punishment to a fine of $12,500 formed the basis of Mr. LaGuardia's attack.

Declaring that Judge English had refrained from sending Joyce to prison on the ground that the latter had a "weak heart," Mr. LaGuardia said:

"On this day that the whole nation, with bowed heads, are uttering prayers and paying tribute to the men who have given their all for the sake of the country, we read the disgusting announcement that a weak judge, or perhaps influenced, failed to send a reptile of a profiteer to jail on the plea that the profiteer had a 'weak heart.'

"This weak-hearted man is Henry L. Joyce, who defrauded the Government out of more than $1,000,000 and pleaded guilty. Joyce stole the money from his Government by overcharging for repair work which he sent to his own company.

"Two managers of the company who did not plead to weak hearts, but who entered pleas of guilty, were punished also with a small fine. So that we have the spectacle of a man who pleads guilty of stealing $1,000,000 from the Government and in the end get off with a fine of $12,500 and the other two criminals being let off with a fine, in each case, I understand, of $1,000 each.

"If Joyce, with a weak heart, stole a million dollars, what would he have done if he had had a strong heart?

"I denounce the Federal Judge who failed to take these three culprits and send them to the penitentiary where they belong and where they should have been kept in solitary confinement so as not to contaminate the hardened criminals in Atlanta. How do we expect the American people to have confidence in our Federal courts if a man may steal a million dollars and get away with a fine of $12,000 on the plea of a weak heart?"

YALE CLUB FIGHTS POLICE.

"Snake and Book" Celebration Ends In Arrest of Leader.

NEW HAVEN, May 30.—"Holy Night" at the Cloister Club, commonly known as the Book and Snake Society, a Yale Sheffield fraternity house, turned into what might rightly be called a "holy terror" for members of the fraternity and the police late last night.

Members of the club, following their last meeting at the fraternity "tomb," built a huge bonfire in the street, into which they tossed the derbies which they are obliged to wear at every meeting of the society. While the fire was flaring one of the students called the police to report a bogus fire.

Unable to find the alleged fire, the police traced the telephone call to the clubhouse and a wagon load of patrolmen were dispatched there. They knocked at the door and were admitted, and the first over the doorstep were greeted with a storm of wet towels, books and other handy articles.

The siege was short. The students were in such great number that it was impossible to herd them together, so Horace R. Graves, reputed head of the fraternity, was arrested on a charge of setting a bonfire in the street without a permit. In City Court today the case was continued.

Y., May 30.—More than 450 persons from various parts of the country, but particularly from Westchester County, New York City and Washington, will attend a dinner at Briarcliff Lodge tomorrow night to former United States Senator Chauncey M. Depew, in celebration of his ninetieth birthday. Mr. Depew was 90 years old April 13, but Westchester County officials chose tomorrow night to honor him.

On the list of speakers for the dinner are Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada; former Governor Benjamin B. Odell of Newburgh, Bishop D. Lincoln Ferris of Washington, Coadjutor of Western New York; former Congressman Pugsley of New York, Congressman Everett Sanders of Indiana and J. Mayhew Wainwright.

taining a long preface and a justification of Aretino," which were to be distributed only to scholars and those who had a legitimate interest in it.

He refused to permit a psychiatrist to test his mentality "until I have an opportunity to consult an attorney or obtain my father's permission."

"My theory of the Franks case is that he was kidnapped for ransom by some one who knew him," he said. "I have been reading the papers about it ever since he was killed.

"Do you think you should be released?" he was asked.

"No, it would be criminal on the part of the police to let me go now on account of the glasses. I thought all along that the glasses were the best clue for the police to follow, never thinking they were mine. I didn't know I had lost them but now I am sure I did, and it was on one of my many trips to that vicinity. I think the last time I was there was on the Sunday preceding the Franks murder."

From an automobile similar to Leopold's a chisel, wrapped with adhesive tape and bearing bloodstains, had been flung on the night of the murder of Franks. The slain boy had been hit over the head with some weapon three times.

Nathan Leopold Sr., expressed full confidence in the innocence of his son, in a formal statement saying that it was the desire of both himself and his son to aid the authorities in running the murderer to earth and that, at the present time, he had no intention of seeking his son's release from custody through court proceedings.

Loeb, as well as Leopold, is being held for further examination.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 30.—C. F. Heath, the Chicago druggist, in a hospital here suffering from poison, was said today to have a chance to recover. Police here have been unable to connect Heath with the Franks kidnapping case. It is believed that should he regain consciousness he will be unable to throw any light on the mystery.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 30.—Three men held here who, according to information from Chicago may be wanted there in connection with the Franks case, were arrested Saturday night. A quantity of nitroglycerine, sledge hammers and other tools for blowing safes were found in their hotel room.

MINERS DEDICATE MITCHELL STATUE

PINCHOT ONE SPEAKER

SCRANTON, Pa., May 30.—Thousands of union mine workers from every part of the anthracite region, marched in a parade here this afternoon, in tribute to John Mitchell, who led them to victory in the labor struggles of 1900 and 1902. After the parade, the laboring men gathered on the court house square where a beautiful monument of granite and bronze was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies.

Governor Pinchot, John L. Lewis, International President of the miners' union; Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor; William Green, Secretary-Treasurer of the miners' union; W. B. Wilson, former Secretary of Labor; Frank Farrington, head of the Illinois miners; Mayor John Durkan, Judge George W. Maxey and others spoke at the unveiling and dwelt upon the work of Mitchell as the supporter of the workingman during his years as leader of the miners.

"It was a formidable combine of brains and capital that John Mitchell planned to tackle," said Mr. Lewis in describing the work of his predecessor in the union leadership. "Firm in his resolve to batter down the system that permitted the employer to be sole arbiter of the religious, economic and political life of his employes, * * * he sent his organizers into the anthracite fields.

"Mitchell's sincerity illumined the charm of a personality heretofore unequaled in the American labor movement. His priestly appearance and rare poise endeared him to the entire population of the anthracite region. He was philosophic in unwilling to accept the common viewpoint of complaint without resistance to recognized wrongs. His analytical ability was always alert; his methods of deduction were his own; he cared naught for accepted generalities. He always planned, and he progressed firmly."

The union Mitchell helped to build, Mr. Lewis said, had many times since "demonstrated its fitness and integrity upon the industrial battlefield," and its existence "bespoke the work of a devoted life."

Governor Pinchot said it was "eloquent of America's opportunities that John Mitchell, poor, orphaned and with but six months of schooling, should have wrought such changes in a wide community as he brought about in the anthracite field. We know the American of sound and high ideals, the ideals of Washington and Lincoln and Roosevelt, the ideals of every good American, when to him we dedicate this monument."

The monument cost about $80,000. Funds for its erection were subscribed by the hard coal workers.

COOLIDGE NOMINATOR PICKED, BUT UNNAMED

Permanent Convention Chairman and Vice Presidential Candidate Unchosen.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—With the Cleveland convention less than two weeks away, friends of President Coolidge are beginning to narrow consideration of men for two important convention posts and for second place on the ticket. The maker of the nominating speech for Mr. Coolidge has virtually been chosen, but no selection has been made for permanent chairman of the convention and the field of candidates for the Vice Presidential nomination still is open.

The man chosen to place the President in nomination is understood to be one whose name has not figured prominently heretofore in public discussion of the choice. Announcement of his name is expected soon.

Secretary Work's name has been added to the list of those under consideration for permanent Chairman and his selection appears probable if it is decided to give the place to any one directly connected with the Administration. Some of Mr. Coolidge's closest advisers, however, are taking the position that no Cabinet member should have a place of prominence in the official make-up of the convention and that the chairmanship should go to some local Republican leader in the West.

Great interest is manifested among some of those in the inner circles of the party regarding the recently launched boom for Secretary Hoover for the Vice Presidency. Mr. Hoover himself has given no indication of lending aid to the move and has declared he is not a candidate. Nevertheless party leaders are watching with unusual care the reaction of the country to the use of Mr. Hoover's name.

One of the latest additions to the list of those urged for the place is Senator Phipps of Colorado.

GYPSY KING'S TOMB RAIDED BY ROBBERS

Police Find Casket Opened in Sacramento Mausoleum, but the Body in Place.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 30.—Memorial Day crowds thronging East Lawn Cemetery, this city, found a corps of city police, detectives and finger-print experts engaged in the task of examining the wrecked tomb of Alex Adams, King of the Gypsy tribes in the United States until his death in 1917. The tomb had been forcibly entered during the night.

The pretentious mausoleum had been entered through chiseling of the lock to the bronze doorway. A steel casket covering the wooden coffin of the gypsy monarch had been opened. The body was in place, according to Police Corporal Lee Parker, but efforts had been made, he believed, to extract any valuables which, according to popular belief, always are buried with dead gypsy chieftain.

A large marble slab bearing the inscription "King Alexander Adams, Born April 13, 1861. Died Oct. 1, 1917," had been broken from its bedding of plaster and placed on the floor.

Just before the casket containing Adams's body was sealed in its niche the casket was opened to give Queen Mary a final look at the body of her husband. It is recalled that on that occasion she opened a well-filled purse and poured a handful of coins into the casket. The presence of the coins is believed to have incited the violation of the tomb.

Large sums have also been contributed by other Jewish philanthropists.

AUTOISTS COMPLAIN OF LIQUOR HUNTERS

All Cars Stopped and Searched by Armed Men on Some Long Island Roads.

WOMEN AFRAID TO DRIVE

Reckless Flourishing of Weapons and Rough Treatment of Motorists to Be Investigated.

The threats of terrorism by rum-runners in Suffolk County to which exception reference was made by Captain Charles Gordon at a meeting of the C. T. U. in Patchogue are not condemning the residents of some Long Island towns as much as the general practice of holding up all sorts of automobiles in the search for illicit liquor. In one section of Suffolk County, at least, women no longer drive automobiles at night, even for short distances, it was learned yesterday.

Because of this situation, which is angering many of the residents of Hampton Bays, Quogue, West Hampton Beach and other towns, Sheriff Biggs is expected to get legal advice shortly as to the right of persons other than Government officials to stop and search automobiles. He is anxious to learn whether it is his duty to curb this sort of hold up. To whom he would apply for an opinion he would not say yesterday.

In one such case, about two weeks ago, a man and his wife were returning from the movies in Riverhead when they were stopped. One of the party on the road flourished a revolver, whereupon the woman in the car fainted. No liquor was found and the man was permitted to drive on. A more recent case occurred on Tuesday night when Mr. and Mrs. George Heifrich of Hampton Bays were stopped at the Canoe Place bridge. Both were made to leave the car while it was searched. No liquor was found in this instance either.

Heifrich complained to Sheriff Biggs, telling him that Mrs. Heifrich since the hold-up had been ill in bed from the shock of the experience.

"I investigated the complaint," said the Sheriff yesterday, "and citizens we talked to told us that every car that passed over the road on Tuesday night and early Wednesday morning was stopped. The men who did the stopping gave the impression they were customs men. In one instance a man with a revolver jumped on the running board of a car in which a young couple and others were riding. The driver knocked the man spinning off the car, but three other men also armed jumped on the other running board and made him stop while his car was searched."

According to residents of near-by towns, no less than twenty-five cars were stopped that night. Practically all vehicles coming from Montauk, where the rum-runners are supposed to start from, had to cross the bridge in question. The hold-up process has been invoked elsewhere, however, and many people believe the work is being done by three classes, one the enforcement agents aided by the Klansmen; a second group composed of officials who seek to catch rum-runners and extort bribes, and, third, a few out-and-otu bandits, who are hopeful of getting easy money.

There is a great deal of talk about bribery in Suffolk County, and it is currently reported that some self-constituted officials are making money as fast as the bootleggers. Between the activities of the Klan, the holding up of automobiles and the talk of corruption, to say nothing of the actual rum-running itself, the southeasterly part of Long Island is in a turmoil.

Believing that Sheriff Biggs is powerless in the premises inasmuch as Federal agents usually accompany the armed patrols that have been stopping the majority of the automobiles, some residents of the South Shore are thinking of making an appeal to the Treasury Department in Washington. If an appeal is sent to Washington, it will ask that Federal enforcement agents be directed to wear uniforms at all times when on duty so that they will not be mistaken for bandits and their authority will be at once apparent. In some quarters the belief is held that had this procedure been followed Constable Ferdinand Downs would not have been killed at Manorville last week.

From all reports, even from interested sources, the activities of the agents and the Klansmen have not curtailed perceptibly the amount of rum-running. Klansmen admit that truck after truck containing liquor comes along the south shore into New York every night, driven usually at a high rate of speed. The old story of the truck accidentally stalled and the driver getting out and hastily passing a fifty dollar or hundred dollar bill to the driver of the vehicle that impedes his progress is heard nearly every day.

Various methods are being used to camouflage the truck's contents, one of the latest and most successful being to use only the centre of the truck for liquor, surrounding the cases of whisky with crates of live ducks, so that the whole load appears to be of ducks. The fowls make such a noise that there is no question as to part of the contents of the trucks, and only a thorough examination would reveal the liquor. However, some of the people who live along the main highways are complaining of the noise the ducks make.

FIND STRANGE BIRDS IN PANAMA WILDS

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 30.—The discovery of a virgin country in the mountains of Panama where flocks of brightly plumaged birds were seen by the eye of a white man for the first time and where deer, wild hogs and species of the cat tribe were found in large numbers, is announced by J. Madison Valentine, a member of the exploration party of the American Museum of Natural History, who returned today after three months spent in Panama.

The party sailed from New York on Feb. 5, the object being to study the fauna of the mountain ranges of Panama. Many previous expeditions had explored other sections of this Central American Republic, but this was the first party to traverse the slopes of the mountains, which rise more than 5,500 feet above sea level. Many exhibits were brought back, and some of these are now being prepared by Mr. Valentine for the Peabody Museum at Yale University.

"Exploring in the cloud forest country, about 5,500 feet above sea level, we discovered a number of entirely new birds," Mr. Valentine said. "These were of all sizes and colors. The country through which we traveled has never been mapped, the only inhabitants being a few natives along the sea coast and scattered groups of Indians inland. Other scientific collectors have explored Panama before, but the region over which we worked has been consistently avoided. The country abounds in big game, but we had very little opportunity to shoot. We spent as much time as possible in collecting insect and bird specimens."

Mr. Valentine said that the expedition brought back more than one thousand beetles of different kinds as well as a large collection of spiders and some rare specimens of water snakes. Yale University will receive some of the specimens, including several of the few mammals brought back; the others will be exhibited at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City.

Besides Mr. Valentine, the expedition included Ludlow Grascom, Assistant Curator of the Museum, and Rudyard Boulton, Student Assistant in the Department of Zoology, University of Pittsburgh. The leaders had hoped to capture a condor, the largest of all birds of prey, which has a body four feet long and a wing span of more than ten feet.

DENY BERGDOLL PLANS TO COME BY AIRSHIP

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany, May 30 (Associated Press).—Reports that Grover C. Bergdoll, American draft evader, has applied to go to America as a passenger in the dirigible ZR-3, which is being built here for the United States, or that he has enlisted as a member of the crew, are denied by Zeppelin company officials, who say that the draft dodger's name is not among the thousands of applications received for transatlantic passage. The officials declare that, while Bergdoll is a mechanic, it would be impossible for him to go disguised as a member of the crew, as all the men who will make the flight have been employed here for years.

Bergdoll's relatives in Eberbach say they have no confirmation of his intention to return to the United States on the dirigible. It is said that Bergdoll, who left Eberbach on April 6, has not been heard from since, but it is assumed that he is still touring somewhere in Europe and not worrying about the great pile of telegrams and letters which are accumulating at Eberbach. No word has been received from any member of the party which is accompanying the draft dodger.

SOVIET-CHINA ACCORD NEAR

New Parley Over Recognition and Mongolia Seems Successful.

PEKING, May 30 (Associated Press).—The deadlock which has continued since mid-April in the negotiations looking to Chinese recognition of the Russian Soviet Government appears likely to be broken soon, the Associated Press was informed today. The change, it was said, is expected to come about as a result of further conversations between Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and L. M. Karakhan, Soviet envoy to the Far East.

While officially negotiations between the two countries ceased with a misunderstanding between Karakhan and Dr. C. T. Wang, who was representing China, over the latter's authority to commit his country definitely to an agreement, after a composition of the differences in China and Russia have virtually been reached, it now appears that both parties are adopting conciliatory attitudes, and the prospect is that an agreement shortly will be signed along the line suggested in China's note of April 1.

In this note China suggested clarification of the Soviet's intentions regarding the evacuation of Mongolia and the abrogation of treaties between Mongolia and Russia, which were effective during the Czarist régime. China also suggested reference to a conference of the dispute over Russian Church property in China, which is now claimed by the Soviet.

BRUSSELS, May 30.—Twenty-eight couples, all residents of the pleasant town of Nivelles, celebrated their golden weddings on Ascension Day. This is believed to be a record for a single town.

Some of the couples will soon celebrate their diamond anniversaries, their golden wedding having fallen during the war, when celebration was postponed until better days. Solemn high mass was sung in honor of the occasion and congratulatory speeches were delivered by the public officials.

Proposes Export Tax on Ontario Pulp.

PORT WILLIAM, Ontario, May 30.—An export tax of $1 a cord on all pulpwood shipped to the United States from Ontario was advocated today by James Lyons, Provincial Minister of Lands and Forests. Mr. Lyons predicted that this policy would be followed by the Ontario Government and that the tax would be increased to a point where it would conserve all pulpwood here for Canadian mills.

HOFFMAN IN TEARS AS MOTHER CALLS

"I'm Innocent," He Tells Parent Who Had Just Heard of His Plight.

FAMILY PLANS APPEAL

Slayer Will Be Taken to Sing Sing This Morning to Begin 20-Year Term.

For the first time since he was arrested six weeks ago, Harry L. Hoffman, convicted slayer of Mrs. Maud A. Bauer, gave way to tears yesterday in the Richmond County Jail. Hoffman, since his conviction early Thursday morning for second-degree murder and his immediate sentence in the Richmond County Court to from twenty years to life imprisonment, had kept his nerve, although he frequently had engaged in tirades against District Attorney Albert C. Fach and the detectives who gathered the evidence against him.

He was engaged in a denunciation of Mr. Fach yesterday afternoon when his mother, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, 66 years old, entered the jail with the slayer's brothers, Albert and David. Mrs. Agnes Keating Hoffman, wife of the murderer, had reached the jail a few minutes before and was waiting in the office of the warden when the mother and her two younger sons entered.

Hoffman's mother, because of her enfeebled condition, had not been informed of Harry's arrest and trial for the murder of Mrs. Bauer until a few minutes before when her youngest son, David, broke the news to her. She seemed unable to comprehend the enormity of the crime of which Harry had been convicted up to the time she was led to his cell and saw the face of her oldest son behind bars.

Deputy Sheriffs who had been assigned by Sheriff Harry Rudolph to guard Hoffman stood on either side of the cell door as Hoffman for the first time in five months spoke to his mother. The slayer's wife and brothers had ranged themselves behind the aged mother, but when she began to speak to him they began to weep. Hoffman tried to retain his composure and succeeded for a few minutes. Then he broke into tears.

Tells Mother He Is Innocent.

"I'm innocent, mother," Hoffman said in a faltering voice as she began to weep.

"I believe you, my boy," the mother replied, foowing this decaration, between sobs, with other words of encouragement.

His wife, who had visited him every day in the jail since his arrest as a suspect in the Bauer murder, then tried to speak, but this only added to Hoffman's grief. Half an hour passed before Hoffman regained control of himself and devoted himself to consoling his mother.

Hoffman, according to the deputies who had watched at his cell door through the preceding night, had the best night's rest since his incarceration. He was cheerful when he arose at 8 A. M. and eagerly read several accounts of his conviction and sentence. Frequently he commented caustically on what he had read and declared that he had been framed by the police and District Attorney Fach.

Toward the close of his two-hour interview with his mother it was said he discussed plans with his wife and his brothers for the filing of an appeal from his conviction. Hoffman was without funds when he was arrested. Alfred V. Norton, whose summing up at the trial was believed to have saved the slayer from the electric chair, was retained by the State to defend him.

The Expense of an Appeal.

Norton, after the jury announced its verdict to Judge J. Harry Tiernan, expressed the belief that Hoffman could get a new trial on appeal. He explained, however, that the State would not defray the expense of an appeal, and said that Hoffman would have to serve the term in Sing Sing unless members of his family succeeded in raising a considerable sum of money.

Mr. Norton said that it would be necessary to print fully 300,000 words of testimony in connection with the application for an appeal. This, he added, was the most expensive feature of such a proceeding. The lawyer visited Hoffman in his cell Thursday afternoon, but, because of his exhausted condition due to the trial, went to Atlantic City yesterday to recuperate over the week-end.

Hoffman will be taken to Sing Sing this morning by Under Sheriff Peter J. Finn and half a dozen deputies. Finn hopes to reach the prison before noon. Sheriff Rudolph said that Hoffman will be placed in the enclosed automobile bus in which the slayer had been taken to and from the jail during his trial, so that he would not be annoyed by curious persons. Whether he would be taken to a train at the Grand Central terminal the Sheriff would not reveal.

KING'S DEPUTY IS BACK IN HIS HUMBLE COTTAGE

Brown, Scots Miner, Says His 10 Days' Service Will Remain an Abiding Joy.

EDINBURGH, Scotland, May 30. (Associated Press)—"Jamie" Brown's term as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland has ended. The old miner and his wife have returned to their humble cottage home at Annbank, automatically divested of their temporary titles and dignities which by universal testimony, they bore with great efficiency, modesty and dignity.

In his farewell address to the General Assembly of the Church, Mr. Brown touchingly testified to Divine help in discharging his duties, and heartily thanked the members of the Assembly and the public for their unbounded kindness and good-will.

"We have been received everywhere with open arms by all classes," he said. "Our visit has been a continuous pleasure and the memory of our sojourn will remain with us as an abiding joy."

LABOR HOUSING PLANS REQUIRE £1,376,000,000

British Government's Program Calls for 90,000 to 225,000 Buildings Yearly Until 1939.

LONDON, May 30.—Thousands of British house-hunters who have been looking for permanent lodgings since the end of the war now have the new hope of finding homes within fifteen years, at least, if the Labor Government's scheme to erect houses costing £1,376,000,000 is carried out.

These figures are contained in an official memorandum issued today, which says that 90,000 houses are planned for erection in 1925, increasing to 225,000 annually during the period from 1934 to 1939, the cost to be distributed over forty years.

The Labor Party hopes the scheme will provide homes for war veterans and others and will help to solve the unemployment problem, thus killing two political bogies with one Parliamentary bill.

Dr. Benes to Visit Vienna.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, May 30.—The visit of Dr. Benes, the Czechoslovak Foreign Minister, on his way from Italy to Prague, is considered to be in connection with the approaching meeting of the League Council, over which he will preside. When the Council meets next month Austria will present her report on reconstruction. Although Dr. Benes will spend only a few hours in Vienna, he has arranged for a conference with Chancellor Seipel.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Pressure was abnormally low Friday night over the Canadian Maritime Provinces and it was relatively low over Alberta and from California southeastward to the Texas coast. High pressure prevailed over practically all other regions west of the Appalachian Mountains.

There have been local rains within the last twenty-four hours in the South Atlantic and Gulf States and the Rocky Mountain and plateau regions. Elsewhere generally fair weather has prevailed. The temperature was lower Friday in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, the Gulf States and Arizona, and it was somewhat higher in the upper lake region, the upper Mississippi Valley and the Far Northwest.

The indications are for showers in the extreme South and generally fair weather elsewhere east of the Mississippi River Saturday. There will be considerable cloudiness over the Washington forecast district Sunday, but precipitation will probably be confined to Florida, the East Gulf States and Western Tennessee. The temperature will be lower Saturday in South Carolina and Southern Georgia, and it will continue below normal elsewhere east of the Mississippi River during the next two days.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

All American markets for securities or commodities were closed for the Memorial Day holiday yesterday, and there were no quotations. On the Stock Exchange and in numerous other markets the suspension of business will continue until Monday. The granting of the extra Saturday holiday by the New York Stock Exchange was contrary to the policy pursued of late by that institution, but the decision was clearly influenced by the shrinkage in outside commission business, during the past week or two, to negligible proportions. It has seemed to be the disposition of the financial public, and to a large extent of professional speculators, to await the political developments of a few weeks hence.

It is easily possible to exaggerate the influence on financial sentiment of even so important occurrences in the political field as the party nominations. If La Follette or any other statesman with erratic notions were to be named by a third party which gave reasonably convincing signs of dividing the electoral vote of the States, there would then undoubtedly come into existence new reasons for financial unsettlement. That probability, however, does not appear to have been considered seriously in well-informed financial circles.

With one exception, a third party has never in the past half-century been taken as a factor for serious consideration, and that exception, occurring in Mr. Roosevelt's campaign of 1912, was in all respects a personal incident rather than a political uprising. Capture of one of the regular party nominations (as in 1896) by a political agitator has always been more of a source of apprehension to financial watchers as the convention dates approached. But no such result has ever been witnessed except when the party's active and important membership was violently divided beforehand on some single outstanding public issue; and the financial community is well aware that no such situation exists today. Wall Street, however, is always set on pinning its hopes and apprehensions to a given event or a given date, and it is hardly to be supposed that it would fail to follow the practice when the party nominations are so near at hand.

Yesterday's European markets gave little indication of drift of financial sentiment. Although no New York quotation for the franc was obtainable, the Paris market's rise in the dollar's price yesterday to 19 1-3 francs marked a decline in the dollar value of the franc to 5.17 1-3 cents, which compares with Thursday's closing price of 5.22½ on Wall Street and which is lower than any price quoted since March 20. Sterling advanced with some violence at Paris; this may in part have indicated the London market's feeling of relief that the action of the Liberal Party, Thursday evening, had averted the imminent possibility of a new and disturbing general election.

But the recent downward movement of the sterling must also be judged in the light of this week's rather striking returns of our trade with Europe. This statement shows that, whereas the surplus of our exports to that Continent over our imports from it had been $50,500,000 in April, 1923, and $83,600,000 in March of the present year, it was $96,300,000 last month. Our trade with England, in which the export excess was $17,000,000 during April of 1923, was $36,800,000 in the same month of the present year. In the ten completed months of the fiscal year our export surplus to Europe as a whole has increased $209,000,000 and our export surplus to England alone $133,000,000.

Barnsdall Earnings Are Higher.

The Barnsdall Corporation earned, after charges, $470,650 in the first quarter of 1924, according to the figures made public yesterday. This compares with $181,848 earned during all of 1923. The increase was due largely to improved operating conditions in the refining and oil producing departments.

Loans, Investments and Deposits Drop In Member Banks' Report as of May 21

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Aggregate decreases of $106,000,000 in loans and investments, of $93,000,000 in net demand deposits and of $65,000,000 in Government deposits, are shown in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly consolidated statement of condition, on May 21, of 749 member banks in leading cities. Total loans and discounts declined by $75,000,000, loans on corporate securities, by $11,000,000, and "all other," largely commercial, loans and discounts, $76,000,000, while loans on U. S. Government securities increased by $12,000,000. Investments in U. S. Government securities and investments in other bonds on stocks show reductions of $14,000,000 and $17,000 respectively.

Member banks in New York City show a reduction of $1,000,000 in loans and discounts, increases of $11,000,000 in loans on U. S. Government securities and of $10,000,000 in loans on corporate securities being more than offset by a reduction of $22,000,000 in "all other" loans and discounts. As against an increase of $6,000,000 in holdings of Liberty bonds, holdings of Treasury notes and certificates of indebtedness show a decrease of $7,000,000 and holdings of corporate stocks and bonds a decrease of $21,000,000.

Of the total decrease of $93,000,000 in net demand deposits, $24,000,000 was reported for banks in the New York district; $18,000,000 in the Chicago; $10,000,000 each in the Atlanta and San Francisco and smaller decreases in most of the other districts.

Time deposits of all reporting banks increased by $12,000,000, mostly outside of New York City. U. S. Government deposits declined $65,000,000 for all reporting members, of which $16,000,000 was reported by the New York City banks.

Reserve balances of all reporting institutions increased by $3,000,000, while cash in vault decreased by $6,000,000. The New York City banks show an increase of $10,000,000 in reserve balances and a reduction of $1,000,000 in cash.

Borrowings of all reporting members from the Federal Reserve Banks declined from $175,000,000 to $174,000,000, and like borrowings of the New York City members declined from $20,000,000 to $18,000,000.

$107,955,060 BONDS OFFERED THIS WEEK

New bond offerings for the week ended yesterday, despite the fact that the week was cut short by a holiday, totaled $107,955,060, against $91,114,550 the previous week. The total was one of the largest of the year. Railroad financing accounted for more than half of the new business, the largest single issue consisting of $35,000,000 Baltimore & Ohio bonds. Another large issue was $20,000,000 of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company refunding and improvement bonds, Series D.

By groups this week's offerings compared as follows with last week's:

	This Week.	Last Week.
Railroad	$605,234,000	$40,050,000
State and municipal	80,871,060	28,014,550
Public utility	10,350,000	8,400,000
Farm loan	1,500,000	1,200,000
Foreign Government		9,250,000
Industrial		4,000,000
Totals	$107,955,060	$91,114,550

The last two weeks of financing have fairly well cleaned up the market for new issues. Public utility financing will comprise the principal item of new issues, it was said, with more railroad issues in prospect for the latter part of June. Nearly every public utility house, it was said, is working on one to three issues. These range as high as $50,000,000, but the offering of the larger issues is not expected until late Summer.

Easy money rates, it was said, had proved a boon for the market. Buying by institutions, first reflected in the Liberty bonds and short-term paper, has been extended to some other gilt-edge classes. Industrial corporations did more bond buying in the last week than in any preceding week of this year, one banker reported.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

New York Markets Closed Today.

The New York Stock Exchange and all the New York commodity exchanges will be closed for an extra holiday today, this being the first of such extra holidays observed on so general a scale on any occasion since 1920. Stock exchanges at other points in the United States will also keep holiday today, but the Chicago Board of Trade and the New Orleans Cotton Exchange will remain open for cotton trade. The European markets will also be closed today, according to their recent regular practice during the Spring and Summer months.

Rediscount Rate Reductions.

The action of the Cleveland Federal Reserve Bank in reducing its rediscount rate from 4½ to 4 per cent., thus bringing the quotation in line with the New York bank's figure, was not a surprise to Wall Street. Easy money conditions are existent in the interior as well as on the Atlantic Seaboard, according to bankers' reports, and this surplus of funds has been evidenced in an almost unbroken stream of funds from the West to New York for employment. Further action on the rediscount is expected by other central banks. Boston and Philadelphia, despite their failure in the last fortnight to reduce their rates, are expected to do so shortly. Conditions in those cities are not far different from New York, and, it was reasoned, the lead of New York would eventually have to be followed if the easy money situation continues. One city that is not expected to follow suit is Atlanta, Ga. If anything, it was believed, that city might advance its rate owing to the strong demand for funds due to the Southern building boom.

The Slowing Up in the Steel Industry.

As a result of recent curtailment in the iron and steel industry of the country, due to recent falling off in demand, ingot production of the industry is now down to the lowest level reported in many months. The ingot production, according to trade estimates, is now at a rate of between 59 and 60 per cent. of capacity. This compares with production of about 64 per cent. reported two weeks ago. The plants of the Steel Corporation are operating at about 66 per cent. of capacity against about 70 per cent. two weeks ago. A similar falling off in operations is also reported in the blast furnace operations, but operations in this branch are about 70 per cent. of capacity. Further reduction in operations is expected as a result of the closing down over the Memorial Day holidays.

Points in the Railway Situation.

Progress in the railroad industry is marking time in certain respects, it was pointed out yesterday, while decisions of various character are being made. For example, the stockholders of the Norfolk & Western are waiting for some decision on the part of the Pennsylvania as to what can be expected from the proposed lease. Those interested in the Denver & Rio Grande Western are awaiting some action from the Interstate Commerce Commission. The same is true in the case of the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio lease to the Atlantic Coast Line and of the Florida Northern & Eastern. The latter company is still waiting for the approval of the commission to proceed with its construction. Any one of these decisions, it was pointed out this week, might result in activity among the railway shares.

Monthly Versus Quarterly Reports.

Public utility corporations which once confined their issuance of earnings statements largely to the investment houses, and once a year mailed to their security holders their annual report, are now reaping the benefits of the more frequent publicity which they are able to command from various periodicals and newspapers. It was pointed out this week that in contrast with the practice of many industrial concerns which issue quarterly statements of earnings, the public utility companies almost without exception now adhere to the practice of issuing for publication monthly statements. The advantages of the latter have become apparent in the greater interest manifested by stockholders in their company's progress, as attested by the increase in the number of persons who are daily joining the ranks of public utility investors.

Two New Low Points.

While the general trend of the stock market has been downward during the past few months, the decline in two prominent stocks on the New York Stock Exchange during recent weeks, has attracted more than the usual amount of attention despite the fact they were moving with the trend. These two stocks were United States Rubber first preferred and Anaconda. The former sold down to the lowest level reported since the panic of 1907. The latter dropped to the lowest level reported since the early stages of the World War, but in 1915, the stock was of an issue of $25 a share par value, whereas the par value is now $50 a share. In both instances, the decline in the stocks, according to Wall Street opinion, is due in part to the financial structures of the companies and in part to trade conditions. Demand for both tires and copper is only on a moderate scale now, and due to keen competition in both industries, prices are unusually low. Regarding the financial position, the last annual report of the United States Rubber Company, showed notes and bank loans payable aggregating $38,235,000 against $25,080,000 at the close of 1922. The company reports that current earnings are sufficient to cover all charges and current dividends on the preferred stock, but Wall Street expects that sooner or later the bank loans will have to be taken care of. In regard to Anaconda, the decline is also attributed in part to the fact that the sale of $150,000,000 bonds last year, places a fixed charge of approximately $9,500,000 ahead of dividends.

Watching the Gulf Coast.

Few railroad subjects of recent days have received so much consideration in the financial district as the proposed control of the Gulf Coast Lines by the Missouri Pacific. The reason is not hard to find. In the first place it is pointed out that the action of the Commission on this proposition will have a direct bearing on a number of other similar propositions that are up for consideration at the present time. If the Commission allows the Missouri Pacific to obtain control of the property it is likely that a number of other propositions of the same character will be submitted within a short time. Another reason, of course, is to be found in the fee that the bankers will receive for selling the property. The action the Commission takes on this is also expected to be a forerunner of what bankers can expect from other deals.

HOLLAND NOW LEADS AS GOLD EXPORTER

REPORT FOR APRIL ISSUED

Federal Reserve Review Shows That Volume of Borrowing for Commercial Purposes Declines.

For the first time in many months England has been displaced as the chief source of gold received in the United States, according to the Monthly Review of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. This report, made public yesterday, shows that in April the Netherlands shipped more gold than England.

Of the $45,000,000 imported during the month, $21,000,000 came from Holland, and $14,000,000 from England. Most of the gold from Netherlands was in Austrian crowns. It was reported that a large part of it was payment for raw materials shipped from the United States to Germany.

For the first four months of this year, according to the April Review of the Second Federal Reserve District, the excess of imports over exports of gold amounted to $156,994,000, compared with $45,424,000 in the corresponding period last year. Since the export movement of 1919-20, the excess of gold imports has totaled $1,534,000,000, and since 1914 the excess has been $2,417,000,000. About one-half of the gold imports in 1923 and thus far in 1924 have been from England.

Discussing the bank credit situation the review says:

"During the five-week period ending May 14, the volume of borrowing for commercial purposes at member banks in leading cities declined somewhat from the high level reached early in April. There were increases, however, in loans on stocks and bonds and in investments in securities; so that the total of all loans and investments at the middle of May was higher than a month previous, and in larger volume than at any time in more than three years.

"Volume of borrowing by member banks at Federal Reserve Banks declined further during the last week of April and in May, while holdings of securities bought in the open market increased slightly. Total earning assets declined to $795,000,000 on May 21, the lowest figure since the Autumn of 1917.

"Further easing of money conditions during the last week of April and the first three weeks of May was reflected in a continued rise of the prices of Government securities, in a reduction from 4½ to 4¼ per cent. in the rate for prime commercial paper, and a decline in the rate for bankers' acceptances from 4 to 3 per cent. On May 1 the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was reduced from 4½ to 4 per cent."

Commenting on the foreign shipments of United States currency the Review says:

"Reports for April from 14 banks in this city which are the principal shippers of United States currency to foreign countries show for the first time since last August an excess of receipts of currency from abroad over shipments. Prior to March this year shipments had been increasing rapidly, but beginning in that month there was a marked decrease, due chiefly to a decline in shipments to Central Europe and countries brdering on Russia. In April there was also an increase in receipts, particularly from Germany. It seems possible that these changes in the movements of currency reflects efforts toward the establishment of stable currencies in Russia and Germany."

JOINS GERMAN SPEYER FIRM.

Karl Bergmann Has Frequently Negotiated on Reparations.

FRANKFORT - ON - MAIN, Germany, May 30.—Karl Bergmann, special German representative in various negotiations of the reparation and other Allied commissions, on July 1 will become a partner in the banking house of Lazard-Speyer-Ellissen which is closely related with Speyer & Co. of New York.

Herr Bergmann, who has frequently visited the United States, was connected with the Deutsche Bank for twenty-five years. Since 1919 he had attended practically all of the conferences where the reparation problem has been internationally discussed, including Versailles, Brussels, London, Cannes and Genoa. Recently he was appointed a German member of the organization committee of the German railway company which will operate the State railways as a private concern.

GERMAN AWARD IS BINDING.

Labor Department Refuses to Reopen Coal Mine Dispute.

BERLIN, May 30.—Despite the coal operators' declaration that the award in the mining dispute is unacceptable, and although only the Christian Miners' Union approve, while the Socialist unions are against it, the Labor Department today ruled that the award is binding on both parties. This means an end of the conflict, provided the operators and radical unions bow to the dictum.

The Labor Minister holds that the award points to the only way for the resumption of production urgently needed in the interests of Germany's economic life.

LIVERPOOL'S COTTON WEEK.

Further Reduction in British Stocks —Imports Smaller.

LIVERPOOL, May 30.—Weekly cotton statistics: British stocks, 597,000 bales, compared with 610,000 last week, 626,000 two weeks ago and 653,000 in this week a year ago; of which American 316,000 bales, against 342,000 a week ago, 349,000 two weeks ago and 277,000 a year ago. Imports 43,000 bales, against 46,000 last week; of which American 11,000, against 28,000.

Forwarded 47,000 bales, against 54,000; of which American 31,000, against 30,000. Exports 9,000, against 7,000; of which American 7,000, against 5,000. Sales 25,000, against 24,000; of which American 15,000, against 15,000.

"SCANTIC LINE" IS FORMED.

Eight Fast Steamers in New Service With Sweden.

Further cooperation between commercial interests in Sweden and the United States in the handling of the growing trade between the two countries has been initiated through several new arrangements just reported. The United States Fleet Corporation has announced the establishment of "The Scantic Line," a direct service between Norfolk and Boston, on the American side, and the principal ports of Sweden and other Scandinavian and Baltic countries. Eight fast freight steamers have been assigned to this route and will sail on regular schedules. The American end of this traffic is to be handled entirely by Moore & McCormack of New York City.

This new shipping service in addition to that of several steamship companies flying the Swedish flag, places Swedish exporters in a highly favorable position for making prompt deliveries on short notice.

Cooperation in distributing commercial information of importance to exporters and importers is the aim of the American Swedish Chamber of Commerce in Gothenburg, an institution which has just been established, with Eric Anderson as President. This is the first chamber of its kind organized in Sweden.

TELLS OF PLIGHT OF COTTON INDUSTRY

Few, if Any, Mills Operating at Normal Capacity, Says Trust Company Survey.

The condition of the cotton textile industry of the United States "is both difficult and discouraging!" according to statements by the New York Trust Company in the current number of its monthly bulletin, The Index. Few, if any, of the cotton mills are operating at normal capacity, according to the review, and many mills are closing down temporarily. Keen competition prevails among the various mills for the business now being offered, and their output is often offered at prices below the cost of production.

"Several unfavorable factors contribute to this disturbing situation," the review says. "The principal one is no doubt the high price for raw cotton. With cotton at around 30 cents a pound, or more than double its pre-war price, it is impossible for cotton manufacturers to produce goods for sale at prices approaching the pre-war level. Consumer demand for staple goods is, in consequence, below normal, both in this country and throughout the world.

"The position of the cotton crop also has a depressing influence on American manufacturing. Early crop forecasts are creating expectation of both an enlarged domestic crop yield and lower prices for the raw material. This leads to limited buying in the cotton goods trade, such as the placing of orders for sufficient yardage merely to keep pace with current business, on the presumption that cheaper cotton will be reflected in lower priced fabrics.

"Manufacturers contend that foreign competition is largely responsible for the depression existing in the American cotton textile industry. Even should this year's cotton crop exceed the yield of the last few years there is no possibility of raw cotton declining to its pre-war price level. Manufacturers cannot, therefore, hope to find a remedy for their difficulties in greatly lowered prices for raw material. Cotton is certain to remain high priced, compared to its pre-war level, for a period of years at least. Labor costs are likely to continue permanently higher than pre-war costs, and these are factors against the cheap production of cotton."

The opinion is expressed, however, that some reduction from present prices may be possible through lower priced raw material and reduced operating costs, and consumer demand may be slightly stimulated in consequence. But competent opinion holds that the troubles of the cotton textile industry will not be entirely eliminated until the public has been educated to a realization that cotton fabrics can no longer be produced at pre-war prices, accepts the inevitable and resumes its accustomed use of cotton goods.

Imperial Labor Parley Delayed.

LONDON, May 30.—The Imperial Labor conference, which was to have been held in August, has been postponed indefinitely because of the political situation in various parts of the empire, where the Labor parties are more or less unsettled in connection with general elections. This is said to be the case in South Africa and Newfoundland and to a certain extent in Australia. Representatives of Labor in these places informed the British party that it would be inadvisable for labor leaders in the Dominions to leave their homes this Summer.

PIGEONS LOSE RACE WITH FLYING MAN

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Lieutenant J. Kendrick, a member of the 102d Aviation Squadron, New York National Guard, piloting a plane from Staten Island to Washington today in a courier race with a flock of thirty trained homing pigeons, arrived at Bolling Field this afternoon two hours and forty-one minutes ahead of the first of the pigeons.

Lieutenant Noble carried a message to Secretary Hughes, and the pigeons brought one to the Japanese Ambassador, M. Hanihara, inviting them to a Japanese garden party to be held on the afternoon of June 7 at Beechwood, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, at Scarborough-on-the-Hudson. The function will be for the benefit of Tsuda College, Tokio, which was destroyed in the earthquake.

The airplane and the thirty pigeons left Miller Field simultaneously at 11:25 o'clock today (12:25 o'clock New York Daylight Saving Time).

The contestants, man and birds, ran into heavy head winds on the way south and this held them back. Lieutenant Noble was forced to make two landings for gasoline, one at Philadelphia and one at Baltimore.

Lieutenant Noble said that a prominent man wagered $1,000 on the pigeons, betting that they would reach Washington ahead of the aviator.

The message to Secretary Hughes, carried by Lieutenant Noble, was handed to him at Miller Field by Miss Willis Mitchell. The aviator landed at Bolling Field at 4:25 o'clock. While his elapsed time was three hours, his actual flying time was three nours 30 minutes.

On arriving here Lieutenant Noble entered an automobile and was driven to the residence of Secretary Hughes, where he delivered his message and invitation. He was anxious to learn whether he or the pigeons had won the race.

The first of the pigeons reached the home of their owner, W. F. Dismer, at 1,347 Columbia Road, this city, at 5:36 P. M. The second pigeon came in a few minutes later, and others followed.

The lapsed time of the fastest of the pigeons from Mitchel Field to Washington was 6 hours and 1¼ minutes, as compared with 3 hours 30 minutes for the aviator.

A throng of nearly 500 officers and their friends witnessed the start of the race of airman and pigeons from Miller Field. They applauded vigorously when the first three of the birds were liberated, just after Lieutenant Noble had hopped off, and soared speedily to an altitude higher than the plane, circled the field once or twice, and then struck a bee-line almost due south at high speed, and well in advance of the Curtiss machine.

The first three pigeons were released by Mrs. Vanderlip, her daughter Charlotte and Mrs. Willis Mitchell, respectively. The remaining thirty-two pigeons were sent off a few moments after the National Guard pilot took the air. They suffered a corresponding handicap, but the three leaders continued to hold their own until the entire flock of feathered messengers and the human flier were lost to sight.

Arrangements for the unique race were made by Major George Vaughn, who is stationed at Governors Island; Captain Curtis Wheeler from Fort Hamilton and Captain G. L. Archer of Miller Field.

COOLIDGE BARS RAISING GUNS ON BATTLESHIPS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—President Coolidge has told Senators connected with the Naval Affairs Committee that he is stoutly opposed to the proposed appropriation of $6,500,000 for elevation of the guns of the thirteen battleships.

He declared, however, as strongly in favor of the $150,000,000 bill for modernizing the navy, which has already passed the House.

In accordance with the President's position, the Senate Naval Affairs Committee will eliminate the gun elevation feature of the bill now pending in the Senate committee, and promptly report the House bill.

Senators Hale and Pepper of the Naval Affairs Committee, conferred with the President today, accompanied by Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, regarding various features of the bill as drafted by the Senate committee, which will be taken up tomorrow by the Senate.

$2,000,000 FOR FARM AID.

Corporation Started by Coolidge to Bring Loans Up to $4,000,000.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Treasury officials were advised today that the Agricultural Credit Corporation, which was organized at the instance of the President to aid in relieving the stringent credit situation in the Northwest, has made a second call on its capital subscriptions. The call is for $2,000,000, making a total of $4,000,000 paid in from a total authorized capital of $10 000,000.

With this second $2,000,000 available, Treasury officials believe the loaning powers of the corporation probably will be able to meet all current calls upon it. It already has approved loans of $1,135,000 for the purpose of reopening eleven closed banks. Two of them have actually started business again, and advices received here were to the effect that the others would reopen as quickly as the necessary papers are completed.

In addition to the loans made for reopening banks, the corporation has agreed to loan $1,172,000 to sixty-four other financial institutions in the agricultural districts.

Secretary Mellon was told by officials of the corporation that they are making loans for the benefit of the farmers by taking up tax warrants at a 6 per cent. rate against the 12 per cent. rate which would be charged under tax penalty clauses. Loans for seed purposes also have been made in considerable amounts.

$20 NOTE WAS SPURIOUS.

Chemist Arrested at Pennsylvania Station Had Three Others.

When Robert N. Pettit, 40, a chemist, living at the Hotel Belleclaire, tendered a $20 note yesterday for a ticket to Baltimore at the Pennsylvania Station, the agent's suspicions were aroused and after an examination Pettit was arrested. Three other counterfeit bills of the same denomination were found in his possession. Pettit protested that he had not known they were spurious, saying that he had obtained them at another hotel in exchange for a larger bill. Pettit was detained for further investigation.

TO SEEK REMOVAL OF LEGION OFFICIAL

City Club Post Will Ask Dismissal of Commander Spafford Unless He Retracts Attack.

Unless Edward E. Spafford, State Commander of the American Legion, withdraws the statements he made about the City Club Post and its officers, that post intends to prefer charges with the National Executive Committee and ask for the removal of the State Commander. This became known yesterday when officials of the City Club Post also said they were still waiting for the charges which Murray Hill Post said it would prefer against the City Club Post.

"If those charges are not presented," said Carl Getz, a member of the City Club Post and its former commander, "we not only will prefer charges against the Murray Hill Post, and thereby bring the matter out in the open, but we even will ask the National Executive Committee to remove the State Commander unless he withdraws the statements he has made about this post and its officers."

Other officers of the post also said that the County Chapter of the Legion faced a fight on the question of free speech. The trouble, they said, originated in the City Club's opposition to the bonus. That led to talk of expelling the club from the Legion, but no such drastic action was taken during the bonus fight. Then came the City Club's report on conditions at the Veterans' Mountain Camp and the manner in which the camp's financial condition had been presented to the public. That led Commander Spafford to such bitter criticism that the City Club demanded a retraction. So far Commander Spafford has not withdrawn what he said.

The bitterness came to a head last Monday night when the Murray Hill Post adopted a resolution accusing the City Club Post of disloyalty. Members of the Murray Hill Post could not be reached last night, but it is understood that efforts were made by the County Committee of the Legion to have the matter withdrawn. In this, it is understood, the County Committee failed and the Murray Hill Post is said to have promised to offer specifications within ten days.

The City Club's position is that it has simply been opposed to the majority policy of the Legion on the bonus. It asserts that such opposition is both loyal and proper under the constitution of the organization and that if the Murray Hill Post does not act they will prefer charges against that post and bring the fight out into the open.

At the same time the City Club post has demanded that Commander Spafford withdraw his criticisms. In this they have failed and so they are considering taking the matter to the National Committee and demanding Spafford's removal for conduct unbecoming an officer of the American Legion.

MAY, 1924, MOIST, BUT NOT A FREAK

There Have Been Other Mays With More Rainfall, Weather Records Show.

Interesting features of the weather during the current month were revealed yesterday when James H. Scarr, forecaster of the United States Weather Bureau, completed a summary of the thirty days to date and made comparison with the local records for every month of May since 1871, before which there were no records.

Nearly everybody in New York and vicinity for the last three or four weeks has been saying that there never was another May like this one—and they hope there'll never be another. Mr. Scarr, however, said that there had been Mays just like this before.

In May, 1908, there fell 9.1 inches of rain. In May 1901, the rainfall was 7.01 inches. These figures indicate that the fall of 5.23 inches of rain in the thirty days of May, 1924, to date was not extreme, regardless of what may be added to the count today, which is the thirty-first.

Other Mays since 1871 had a greater precipitation than 5.23 inches, but Mr. Scarr thought it had been shown that any one who says we never had rain in May like this before is wrong. The average for all the Mays of which the bureau has records, however, is 3.18 inches of rain, so May, 1924, exceeds the average.

During the entire thirty days of this May not a single one passed without threatening clouds; there was rain or traces of rain on seventeen out of the thirty days; there were but seven reasonably clear days, that is, days that were three-fourths clear; nine days were completely overcast, so that not once in his diurnal round did the sun get a chance to peek through the clouds.

The Weather Bureau finds that the average temperature for May since 1871 has been 60.6 degrees. The average temperature for May, 1924, irrespective of what may develop today, was 54.5 degrees. Mr. Scarr also finds that up to the present there had never been a May recorded which did not contain at least "one of those hot days," the days when the thermometer stands somewhere between 80 and 95 degrees. This May did not have one of them. The highest temperature was on May 24, when the thermometer reached 71 degrees. The only other days on which the temperature was above normal were two, the 6th and 18th.

So now it can be told, and with scientific accuracy, May, 1924, was cold and moist.

ASK JANE ADDAMS TO CAMP.

Colonel Nathan C. Shiverick, President of the New York State Reserve Officers' Association, has invited Miss Jane Addams, President of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, to visit the Contact Training Camp at Conesus Lake, New York, and compare the methods of war prevention represented by the two organizations—preparedness and disarmament.

"Our proportion of losses in the World War as compared to the British losses was much greater, owing to the fact that Great Britain was prepared and we were not," Colonel Shiverick wrote in his letter of invitation. "You and your league are seeking to prevent a future recurrence of such a holocaust. The organization of which I am President is likewise seeking to prevent it. You propose to put in operation pure theory. We propose to put in operation a tried and proven plan—that of preparedness—which is similar to the plan of preventives as applied in medicine."

Memorial Tablet Unveiled at Luna—Four Lost Children Returned.

The Memorial Day crowd at Coney Island numbered only about 250,000. The chilly wind drove promenaders off the boardwalk into the restaurants, moving picture houses and other amusement places.

At Luna Park a memorial tablet of the late Captain Paul Boyton, was unveiled by Arthur Jarvis, manager of the park. Captain Boyton forty years ago built the first "chute the chutes" at Coney Island. He died at Sheepshead Bay on April 19 last.

Several policemen from other precincts were on duty to replace the men who had been excused to march in the Memorial Day parade with the Lafayette Post, American Legion. Captain Dillen's men, however, had little to do. One minor accident and four lost children returned to their parents later in the day comprised the list on the police blotter.

WANTS SALUTING FLAG MADE COMPULSORY

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Memorial Day brought a bill from Representative Bloom, Democrat, of New York, which would require civilians to salute the national flag when it passes in parade or be subject to fine and imprisonment. He introduced the bill, he said, because of disrespect shown to the flag in a Memorial Day parade here today.

Mr. Bloom's bill would apply only to the District of Columbia and the territories and possessions of the United States, but he said he hoped similar measures would be enacted by all the States.

"I was one of those who marched in the parade today, and I was astounded at the lack of respect shown to the national colors by persons standing on the sidewal," he said. "The flag would pass, followed by hundreds of veterans, in a semi-military parade, and yet men and boys, either out of ignorance or laziness, would stand by, too lazy or indifferent to tip their hats, or come, to attention, or salute the colors.

Such seeming lack of patriotism and respect for the Stars and Stripes in the national capital to me is astounding. I venture to say that the occurrence could not be duplicated in Kokomo, Ind., or New Rochelle, N. Y. In the heart of the nation the people are patriots, but yet here in the capital there is a spirit of indifference, which, to put it mildly, sets a horrible example for the nation.

"If people will not learn to be patriotic on their own account, the Government should make it mandatory."

The Bloom bill provides that any person who fails to tip or remove the hat when the flag is shown on review shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine noe exceeding $100, or by imprisonment for not more than thirty days, or both.

GOOD land is the fundamental of most sound investments.

Some of the finest farm ranch lands in the world are for sale to-day at cheaper prices than they have been in years and probably cheaper than they will ever be again.

This condition is due to the present agricultural depression throughout the West.

Ranches, from 1,000 to 350,000 acres, in California, Nevada, Utah and Mexico, now paying reasonable returns and with great potential future value, are among those which we are offering for sale.

TAMMANY CHILDREN HAVE PARTY IN PARK

Thomas M. Farley Association Is Host to 28,000, Who Parade Up Avenue.

PRIZE GIVEN FOR FRECKLES

Another Is Awarded to the Largest Family—40,000 Portions of Ice Cream Consumed.

Prizes for freckle-faced boys and large families were among the outstanding features of the annual May Day party of the Thomas M. Farley Association, the Tammany organization of the Fourteenth Assembly District, held yesterday afternoon in Central Park. More than 28,000 children from the district consumed 40,000 portions of ice cream, 9,000 quarts of milk and 4,500 pounds of crackers.

Delegations from the forty-four election districts assembled at various points on First Avenue at 10 o'clock, and marched to Seventy-second Street, through which the procession passed to the park. The parade was enlivened by eight bands. Bright colored floats accompanied each of the election district parties.

Keenan Devery, a process server in the District Attorney's office, who led his twelve children in the parade, won the large family prize. Each of the election districts held a competition to determine which boy had the most freckles and entered him in the district contest. Mr. Farley, who chose the winner, said that he could not see space for another freckle on the face of James Nolan, 13, of 225 East Seventy-fifth Street, and awarded him the first prize.

The party extended along the Fifth Avenue side of the park from Sixty-fifth Street to Seventy-seventh Street. The morning was devoted to races and games and many of the children enjoyed rides in pony carts. Later in the day each of the girls received a jumping rope and the boys got baseball bats and balls. A thousand United States flags and more than 1,500 whistles, rattles and other noise making devices were distributed.

THREE MEXICANS HELD AS REVOLT PLOTTERS

BISBEE, Ariz., May 30.—General Arriaga Hurtado, Colonel Alfreda Duarte and Lieutenant Herberto Honza were bound over to the Federal Court yesterday for trial on charges of attempting to incite a revolution against the Government of Mexico. They were unable to furnish bond and were placed in the city jail.

The three were alleged leaders in the plot to make a surprise attack on Naco and Agua Prieta, and letters found in their possession were said to indicate they were acting for Adolofo de la Huerta.

Immigration officials believe the arrests were responsible for postponement of a revolt at Naco at dawn last Wednesday.

VERA CRUZ, Mexico, May 30.—General Higino Aguilar is now concentrating his forces at Coscomatepec, while the rebel General J. Guadalupe Sanchez is at Huatusco, where he arrived yesterday, according to a message received from Cordoba.

Girl's Fall Called Suicide by Police.

After several hours' investigation Detective Emil Kockman established that Miss Molly Schwarts, 24 years old, of 14 East 106th Street, who was found Thursday night in the yard of the next building, had committed suicide by jumping from the roof. The suicide, the detective said, was due to recurrence of a nervous trouble.
